Davis bows out of race for top seats in Dysart

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Bill Davis won't put his name in to be Dysart's reeve or deputy reeve, but he is "not closing the door 100 per cent" on running for a councillor's position in November's election.

Health as an ambulance dispatcher in Lindsay.

"I have mixed emotions," he said in an interview Sunday. "I'm happy to have a full-time job but I enjoy the political field. . . . But with what's happening at the county, and the closeness with which you have to follow programs there, you know it's going to take more than 17 hours a week." Reeves and deputies form county council and Davis feels that with his new job he will not have the time to devote to both the municipality and the county. Because he thinks there should be some continuity on municipal council, he may decide to vie for a councillor's seat.

"I've got to look after my livelihood and supporting my family comes number one."

Davis was first elected as Dysart's deputy reeve in 1985. He quit 20 months later when he got a job as an ambulance attendant. At that time, Dysart was administering the Haliburton service so he felt there was a conflict. When Minden took over the service in 1988, he ran again as deputy and won. Then in January 1990, long-time reeve Murray Fearrey resigned and Davis was chosen by council to take his place. Davis says he will finish this term.

"It's certainly been a privilege and a pleasure to serve the people and I'd like to thank them for giving me that opportunity," Davis says.

In giving advice to prospective county councillors, Davis says "get your priorities sorted out. You have to be dedicated to the municipality and dedicated to the county." There are many pressure groups which will try to influence your decisions but "make the decision you think is right and you never go wrong."

"It's very trying times in politics right now and it's not going to get easier. I hope candidates continue to have Dysart's best interests at heart so we can continue the way of life we're accustomed to."

"It's very trying times in politics right now and it's not going to get easier"

Dysart's reeve made the decision Friday when he was offered a full-time job with the Ministry of Health as an ambulance dispatcher in Lindsay.

Hundreds revolt against taxes

More than 400 people fill Legion to protest high taxes, spending

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Armchair critics decided it was time to match their words with action when on Friday night more than 400 people cheered on the blossoming tax revolt coalition.

Not since the meeting to support the proposed chronic care unit have so many attended such a community gathering. Their presence at the Haliburton Legion signalled that the apathy of the past is being replaced by an electorate which demands that its politicians act more prudently with their money.

"We voted blindly before and that has got to stop," said Paul Pagnuelo of the Victoria County Tax Coalition, one of the three guest speakers. Before this summer he had never attended a council or school board meeting, had never really taken the time to find out who his representatives were. "In November's municipal election, things have got to be different."

Like the others, Pagnuelo's springboard into action was his 1991 property tax bill. In three years, his taxes have increased 50 per cent. "My paycheque hasn't gone up 50 per cent," says one of the banking world's risk managers.

George Lansens was faced with closing his auto parts company and laying off more than 100 workers when a combination of Market Value Re-assessment and a double-digit municipal tax increase meant paying an extra $58,000 in taxes — during a recession.

By convincing many of his fellow Blenheim businessmen to withhold their taxes, Lansens made council re-open the budget and bring it down to a manageable one per cent increase. The Kent County Tax Coalition was formed and now Lansens is the head of the Ontario Tax Coalition, with more than 60 members, including Haliburton County's group founded by Gary Kenney and John Beachli.

"Blenheim is a model of what is possible," says Lansens, a popular speaker at province-wide tax revolt meetings. "But the message you're sending (here tonight) is not enough. You can affect change only when you have the numbers to do it. Write letters, make phonecalls, attend meetings, get 10 friends to join. If you're not prepared to support actively your tax coalition you might as well go home now and wait for the next tax increase. Politicians are more influenced by numbers than they are by the facts. Make your voices heard."

"Get off your duff," said the most colourful speaker, Frank Sheehans, secretary/treasurer of the Ontario Tax Coalition, and "resident s--- disturber in St. Catharines."

"I've just had it up to here," said the polished performer. "We're nearly broke and yet our so-called leaders spend and spend and spend. If we do nothing, nothing will change. It's time we got off our accepting Canadian

Business feels the gap left behind by Chamber

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

The shockwaves from the announcement that the Chamber of Commerce tourist information outlet is closing on September 30 are being felt among Highland businesses, and many operators do not know what they will do to replace it.

"It's a big loss," says Betty Dionne of Hart Lodge. "I don't think people or businesses realize yet what the impact will be."

She says many people have no idea of how much important work the Chamber has been doing. "People don't see the little things they do," says Dionne. "A lot of it is behind the scenes work, but it's stuff we need."

The Chamber's executive made the decision to close the Minden office. The organization has been hit with a financial double whammy — the county slashed its contribution in half this year, and the recession has stopped many business from paying their membership fees.

Dionne says Hart Lodge has found the Chamber "awfully, awfully good," helping them with everything from booking guests to making the resort a more attractive holiday location.

"I'm getting brochures ready for the winter, and I didn't realize how much was going on here until I called the Chamber," she says. "I don't think the average Joe who passes through the county knows what's going on here, and if someone isn't there to tell him, he won't stop over."

Dionne says one of the most useful functions the Chamber per-

SHORT TEMPERED WITH STRIKES: When Bob Short in Haliburton had to mail 125 thank you notes, he came up with a unique solution to the ongoing postal strike:

he set up his own postal delivery service. The only problem has been getting people to take him seriously, even though he offers the best rates, and service with a smile.

New postal service coming up Short

by MARTHA PERKINS

Bob Short puts a new twist on the postman's creed: rain and sleet are inconsequential to the huge drifts of unsorted mail he will climb to make sure people get their precious letters on time — and with a smile, which is something Canada Post has not always been able to deliver.

The 74-year-old retired teacher has just started up the Pasadena Postal Service and a sign in the back window of his mini-van says it all: Don't Bitch — Switch.

"It arose out of necessity," he says between deliveries. "My wife passed away recently and I had to mail 125 thank you notes, 35 of which are local, and by the time the post office gets around to being able to deliver them, I probably will be dead."

He saved himself $14 in stamps by delivering his letters himself. Then he decided to expand.

Going through his wife's things, he found a crest for their Florida home, the Pasadena Mobile Park. He crossed out Mobile Park and penned in Postal Service. An old yachting cap, complete with important-looking insignia, completes the uniform.

Even without the strike he offers the best prices in town: 25 cents a letter everywhere in town up to 50 pounds; 20 cents with a cup of coffee; free for seniors over 90 (he's 74, remember.) "Short deliveries a speciality."

MPP supports change in plan for insurance

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Given the choice between putting 13,500 insurance workers out of work or keeping an election promise, the NDP government decided people were more important, Haliburton's MPP says in defence of the government's plans to shelve its public auto insurance plan.

"It was the case of the right policy at the wrong time," Dennis Drainville said Friday afternoon, echoing the words of Premier Bob Rae who made the announcement on the first anniversary of the NDP's surprising victory. One of the party's election promises was to replace private drivers' insurance coverage with a government-owned plan.

But bringing the plan to fruition would have cost $1.4-billion and put 13,500 people, mainly women, out of work. With the province still feeling the toll of the recession, "we had to bite the bullet," Drainville said in the telephone interview from his constituency office in Lindsay.

"Being in government means making tough economic decisions. We have to make these decisions based on the financial realities we face day to day."

When electioneering, the NDP had been told by the Liberals that there would be a $32-million surplus. Now the province is facing a $9-billion deficit and the governing NDPers have access to information kept from them while in opposition.

In shelving its plans, however, the government will still pressure the insurance industry to lower premiums. Drainville says insurance officials have indicated this is possible. The government will also work for changes on allowing more innocent victims the right to sue for pain and damages.

Chronic care beds

When asked during the same interview about the status of Haliburton County's proposed addition of 40 long-term care beds, Drainville says "I'm very optimistic and if I wasn't optimistic I would say so."

The proposal, drafted by a steering committee after months of research and consultation with local healthcare agencies, is still under review by two ministries.

"I believe it will all happen soon," Drainville says about a possible go-ahead for the plan. He's in constant contact with various ministry officials. "These things move the way they move and I can't move them any faster."

What keeps him hopeful is "we are part of the beginning of a new long-term health philosophy. (The government) needs a pilot project and where better an area to use? I believe we'll get what we need."

A conversation

Responding to criticism of his leadership in a recent Echo editorial, Drainville tells this story:

Recently he was flying back to Toronto from constitutional talks in Edmonton. (Drainville is chairman of Ontario's new constitutional committee.) The man sitting next to him said "Well, what do you do for a living?"

"You don't really want to know," Drainville replied.

"No, really, tell me — these are long trips."

Drainville answered his question. "I'm a scoundrel, I'm black-hearted, as much money comes into my hands I spend and I'm known in my community as a man you can't trust."

"What are you," the fellow passenger asked, a little more frightened of the possible reply.

"I'm a politician," Drainville said and the man "just roared" in laughter and asked "Then why are you in economy class?"

Most local waterways staff are not affected by strike

by MARK PUBLICOVER
Staff Reporter

Employees of Parks Canada's Trent Severn Waterway officially joined the Public Service Alliance of Canada strike on Monday, but workers at the Haliburton office are remaining on the job because their positions are designated as essential.

"As of today, the Waterway staff is officially on strike," the canal's Assistant Supervisor in Peterborough, Fred Alycia, told The Echo Monday.

"For reasons of public safety and security, some employees will remain on the job for purposes of water control and management of our facilities."

He said staff such as administrative and clerical personnel are now on strike but could be forced back to work depending on future action by the Treasury Board of Canada.

Alycia said the six employees in Haliburton, who operate the dams here, are among 41 workers along the waterway whose positions are designated as essential.

He said other non-essential workers will temporarily remain to ensure that any boaters who may be trapped along the waterway will be able to safely land or exit.

seriously," Mr. Short says. "My only catch is that people look at me as if I was a crazy old man. Take me seriously, please."

How's business? "It's roaring but I'm not going to say who's doing the roaring."

Like most Canadians, Mr. Short is a bit impatient with this most recent postal strike. "It's kind of ridiculous when I think our (United Church) minister gets paid less than someone who shoves mail into a box. I think we're getting a bit greedy and a bit ridiculous."

Floodgate of anger opened at meeting

As if the GST wasn't enough to make businesses flock to the States, St. Catharines' board of education was preparing to spend millions on a new Catholic high school even though four existing schools had a 40 per cent vacancy. "The Catholic school looked like a support system for portables" but the public school board didn't want to give up a building. "These buildings belong to you and I and they're playing territorial prerogative!"

Pagnuelo told of a similar story: The Victoria County Board of Education is closing five existing we have these people truly representing us we will have the credibility to get Queen's Park's attention. It's a very small start but it has an auspicious ending."

Kenney and Beachli tried and failed to get county council to re-open and reduce its budget with a 35 per cent increase.

It's to prevent such things from happening again that the Ontario Tax Coalition is asking that the Municipal Act be changed to allow a vote on all property tax increases and major capital projects. At present, plebiscites aren't binding; Lansens wants a mechanism to force councils to obey the wishes of the people.

out of my pocket, your neighbour's pocket. We have to realize that unless everyone benefits, it shouldn't be."

"We want something that allows us to have input into the system," responded Lansens. "If you vote yes (on a money matter), you're prepared to pay for it."

Greton thanked the members of the coalition for spending so much of their time on the cause. "They're doing what we've wanted to do and haven't had the guts to do."

When Brock Laws of Minden asked how the coalition expected to get changes in the Municipal Act, Lansens said the coalition might selectively target municipalities and ask people to withhold taxes. If someone withholds taxes for three years the municipality can sell your property, but Lansens says it took only three weeks to get Blenheim to reduce its budget.

Curtis Eastmure asked how people can stop the government from introducing mandated programs, such as junior kindergarten. (Many say it would be a publicly funded daycare.)

"They're telling you you must put it in," says Lansens, and yet some school boards are introducing the costly measure before the legislation is even passed.

"Socialist parasites are wasting our money with all these social agencies," Archie Dobbins spat into the microphone. "Parasites, all over us — they feed off everything we do. We should look at our daycare centres which teach kids to be raised by socialists. At school they're taught mediocrity is enough."

"It's hard to realize how weathered your paint has become," said a more philosophical Jim Pierson. "I lived in the United States for 10 years and returned to Haliburton in 1988, thinking I was returning to the same house." It took some time to realize how much of his psyche was eaten up by taxes of one kind or another. "I think finally we've had enough."

Another voice of calm was John Robinson, who said that local politicians weren't earning a lot of money and the job can be unrewarding. He doesn't have the time to be a politician, but he would support someone from the meeting who would step forward. "We northern schools and building two new schools, one in Coboconk. There's no sewer system in Coboconk so holding tanks will be used. The board had to buy property on which to empty the tanks, and for 25 years after the site closes will be responsible for any environmental damages.

This has helped drive the school board budget up 16 per cent to $68.5-million. Since the education levy accounts for approximately 60 per cent of property taxes, Pagnuelo warned people to pay extra close attention in November's election to those candidates for trustees.

"We have to know that the people in charge will pay attention to our concerns, that the people we put into office are going to steer the machine, not be steered by it," said Kenney, co-chairman of the Haliburton County Tax Coalition. "Look around you — no one in this room can be considered a radical. We want politicians to know we can only spend so much."

"We want tax increases to be maintained at the rate of inflation. We want (municipal) restructuring so we don't have inequities and inefficiencies. We want to know our politicians have the backbone to say to the province 'We cannot afford these programs we do not want.'"

"Politicians need to realize they're speaking for us and we're behind them. All of these things can be achieved only because we want them to be achieved. When

The other five key points the coalition is striving towards are: a mill rate increase of zero per cent; no top-down programs mandated from upper governments and thrust upon municipalities to pay for; limit politicians to two terms of office (because he says the average term of a school trustee is 18 years, yet there is a 25 to 30 per cent illiteracy rate among students); recorded votes on all money motions; and consolidation and rationalization of municipal bureaucracies with a view to reducing duplications.

"We're caught up in a self-destructive cycle of tax and spend, spend and tax," said Lansens, who warned people not to accept pat answers from politicians who say they can't cut budgets because people want more services. "Ask to see evidence of requests for services" and then judge whether these requests come from a small number of people with vested interests.

As well, the province must change its "use it or lose it" approach to granting subsidies. Municipalities must now spend more to receive less for such things as road subsidies, and are afraid that if they do not take advantage of the government's full offer, the money won't be there next year.

In the question and answer period, many of the people who took to the microphone were cottagers. Jack Grexton of Minden reminded everyone that "every time we ask for something it comes need some good strong people to make it work."

"It's the structural system which has to change," said Kenney. "You can keep electing politicians but if the structure doesn't change you'll end up with the same thing."

"It's a myth politicians have to be rocket scientists and spend 80 per cent of their time away from family," Lansens said. "In the months I've been involved it's become evident that the administrators are in charge, not the politicians. The politicians are led through a maze of committee meetings, 80 per cent of which is nothing but chaff. It's meaningless, a kitchen conversation."

One Haliburton Lake cottager wanted assurances that the tax coalition was not tied to a specific political party. Sheehans' quips against the NDP did not reassure him, but Kenney said "We're not on a power trip, we're on an information trip. We want to find out what are the candidates' positions on very specific issues." The coalition wants an all-candidates night for all those running for reeve and deputy reeve. (Reeves and deputies form county council.)

Kenney asked for two things that night: donations and volunteers. "Pass the bucket" netted $1,625 and about 20 people stayed after the meeting to see if they can help future efforts.

The Haliburton County Tax Coalition meets on Tuesdays and new members are always welcome.

Chamber served many needs

forms is keeping tabs on hotels and resorts to see where there are vacancies. If people are looking for accommodation, the Chamber was able to let these places know.

A business that has benefited from this is the All-Hart Bed and Breakfast. Heather Alloway, a co-owner, says "a significant proportion of our guests hear about us through the Chamber. It's our most important membership, and our best marketing tool."

Alloway appreciated the Chamber's toll-free phone number. People from all over Ontario could phone the number to see what Haliburton has to offer, and without it Alloway worries many people will not be able to find out enough about the Highlands to want to come here for a holiday.

"If the Chamber of Commerce link is cut off, it's cut off," she says. "This is distressing news, very distressing."

And she says the Chamber's attending sports shows and tourism fairs was an excellent way of marketing the county. "Those people at the Markham snowmobile show — there were an unbelievable number of people there — all of them saw the Haliburton display, and some of them will probably come here some time."

The manager of the Blairhampton Golf Club, Doug Prozak, says the Chamber provided a high visibility marketing service for businesses that are off the main roads.

"I'm sure some businesses won't be affected by (the closure of the office) but for people like us, who are in out-of-the-way places, off the beaten track, the Chamber has been a way to get the word out that we exist," says Prozak.

The closing "is definitely a mistake, but what the hell can you do about it?"

Even institutions such as Sir Sandford Fleming College's School of Fine Arts will be affected. Barb Bolin, the school's director, says the Chamber has played a vital role in helping students find accommodation in the county.

She says many people make enquiries at the Chamber about finding a place to live for the length of their course up here, and the Chamber tells the lodges, resorts, and beds and breakfasts. These places then send information off to these people.

Not having this service any more will "put a lot of pressure on our manpower. We will have to spend a lot more time now finding and organizing accommodation for students."

Bolin says there is not much room to find this extra manpower. "We're going to have to give someone more hours to do this. That time is going to come out of something else. The budget isn't getting any bigger."

She also worries that without the Chamber to pass on accommodation information to people, "people may make, based on sketchy information, bad choices, and that reflects poorly on us."

Dionne says American visitors at Hart Lodge have been very pleased with the Chamber, finding all sorts of activities and attractions in the Highlands through them.

Welfare coffers almost empty; costs continue

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

By the end of July, the county's Social Services Department had spent all but 14 per cent of its 1991 budget. That figure was expected to climb to four per cent by the end of August.

But the county's bad times in the spring might help the financial situation in the fall.

If the percentage of the population receiving welfare rises above 3.5, the province will subsidize the surplus at 90 per cent. Usually, the province pays 80 per cent of the cost and the county picks up the remaining 20 per cent.

Under this formula, Haliburton County is entitled to $24,000 which Morris Honeyman, director of the county's social services department, hopes will get them through September. October and November will be lean months, but by December the county should receive another $24,000 from the province.

The county portion of the department's 1991 budget is $408,000 — 18 per cent more than 1990's actual spending but 65 per cent more than 1990's budget forecast.

"We've tried to cut every corner," Honeyman says. "We're not looking for dollars, we're looking for nickels and dimes and pennies."

He hopes the department will save money now that the province makes direct deposits into its account. "This will save us the interest from having to borrow" to cover costs until provincial payments were received.

With more people returning to work in June and July, the department's caseload decreased, but went up again in August.

"Work is improving a little," Honeyman said, noting that shells of houses and cottages which went up in the summer can be worked on through the winter.

The real test will be "how long the tourist industry carries on. If we have a really nice fall and a quick change into winter bringing on the snowmobilers, these people are going to be busy."

Honeyman says the increase of help wanted ads in the Echo is a good sign the economy may be bouncing back.

Search and rescue team is founded

As the popularity of this region increases so too does the number of occurrences which require emergency assistance. In light of this inevitable fact, the Haliburton County Search and Rescue Support Team has been founded.

It is a non-profit organization comprised strictly of volunteers, who offer their time and abilities to participate in all phases of search and rescue, as well as disaster and recovery operations.

It is the intent of the members to provide personnel, equipment and services to the three emergency services of Haliburton County: the Ontario Provincial Police, local fire departments, and the Haliburton County Ambulance Service.

Duties may vary from serving coffee to fire fighters, assisting the O.P.P. with searching for a lost child, to assisting the ambulance service by providing first aid in a disaster situation.

Dysart may cut dump hours

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

A Ministry of Environment rule that all of Dysart et al's dumps must be gated and manned by October 1 has forced council to take a serious look at present dump hours.

But council is also concerned that it has no money to pay for the recently announced changes.

Last month two ministry officials made no mention of the new requirement when they met with council to discuss ongoing problems and concerns. With no previous warning, council did not budget the costs of gating and manning the dumps which at present have few controls.

To save money, council will have to consider reducing the hours at all landfill sites, including the ones in Haliburton and West Guilford. Both are open seven days a week.

"We tried to accommodate the tourists and the contractors but the time has come when we can't satisfy everyone," said Councillor Brian Watts. Cottagers need the dumps open weekends, especially Sundays, and contractors like them open weekdays.

Before any new hours are set, however, Councillor Murray Fearrey suggested contacting neighbouring municipalities. There's no point having the West Guilford dump open on the day Stanhope's dumps are closed because Stanhope residents would be more likely to visit Dysart's dumps, Fearrey said.

As well, there would have to be stricter enforcement of the card system. At present, few people are asked to show their cards to attendants.

But one Haliburton Lake resident thinks council should resist the ministry's requirements. Referring to Friday's tax revolt rally, Robert Heinz said "To say that council has no choice but must follow what is dictated by the MOE will no longer wash with the public. We don't want these plans and we can't afford them. If the MOE agrees to pay the full cost of these changes then we can look at the situation again. The trough has run dry and the public will no longer pay."

Heinz has indicated he will seek a councillor's position in the municipal elections.

Council's environment committee hopes to present a schedule to council before November's elections.

Thieves leave nasty mess

Cardiff Community police report that a number of break-ins occurred in the area between August 23 and 30.

A particularly gruesome break and enter was reported at a hunt camp on Dyno Road on August 24. Police say the culprits entered through a window. They ransacked the interior, threw food around, and expelled two fire extinguishers.

A mannequin was hung by the neck and stabbed in the crotch with a knife. An arrow was thrust through its head. Ketchup was poured all over the mannequin and on the floor around it.

Satanic slogans were painted on the walls along with threats to the owners of the hunt camp.

The vandals also stole a number of tools, many of which were recovered in a field off Nassau Road south of Lakefield.

In other incidents, a cottager complained to police that people had been using his cottage on An-chour Bay on Paudash Lake.

Board amalgamates committees

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

In an attempt to refocus its accommodation needs, the Haliburton County Board of Education has amalgamated the Minden and Haliburton Accommodation Committees.

The committees — mostly made up of teachers — were set up to identify the needs of schools in each village. Now they will work as one to find solutions for classroom overcrowding.

"The issue of accommodation is not just a Minden issue, or an Archie Stouffer-Elementary School issue," said Director Brad Saunders at Tuesday's meeting.

"Whatever we do in Minden can have an impact on Haliburton and all the way up Highway 35," he said, referring to funding the board recently received to build an addition on Archie Stouffer.

Despite any accommodation changes that may occur as a result, Archie Stouffer's overcrowding will still take priority, promises board Chairperson Cheryl Murdoch. "It has to be solved, but its addition will be reviewed to see if it's the best possible solution," said Murdoch in an interview after the meeting.

This comes as good news to members of the Minden Accommodation Committee. They had expressed concern the proposed addition would make Archie Stouffer "too large to function effectively."

Although most trustees agreed re-valuing the accommodation needs would be a good idea, some felt joining both committees was a mistake. "It's important the two remain the way they are," said Trustee Tim Casey, who says each community has a better understanding of the "nuts and bolts" of its situation. Others agreed. "You in Haliburton know exactly what you need. Bringing the two groups together won't do any good," said Trustee Wally Bunn.

The new Accommodation Committee will make a report to the board in October.

Emotional distress hotline will help in troubling times

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

The final details are now being worked out to launch Telecare Haliburton County — which means help will be only a phone call away for those in emotional distress.

"It's a good opportunity for this county," said James Manuel, the executive director of Telecare Canada. Manuel was recently in Haliburton to make a few final arrangements with Parent Support Services, the social agency which is spearheading the local Telecare satellite office.

"Communities under 30,000 have trouble setting up a line," explains Manuel. For this reason, calls coming to the Telecare office to Hillside House in Haliburton will be forwarded to Peterborough, where trained volunteers are on duty 24-hours a day. Round-the-clock service will also be provided from the county office.

"Our local social agencies will provide a team to follow up on people who've called in for help," said Cliff Blair, co-ordinator of the local Telecare line.

In 1990, Telecare Canada received close to 200,000 calls about a variety of problems. These included suicides, marital and sexual problems. "The largest category is just plain loneliness," said Manuel, whose been involved with Telecare for 10 years.

In that time he has assisted in setting up most of Ontario's 15 Telecare outlets. Each follows the same rules and basic principles. "Our clients understand whatever is said on the phone is kept in the strictness of confidence. If we can't offer them that, we can't offer much."

Blair estimates it will cost $3,400 annually to run the free Telecare line, which will use a Zenith number for residents in the outlying areas of the county. The Telecare line is expected to be in operation by mid-September. For information, please contact Cliff Blair at 457-1209.

BON VOYAGE: Haliburton's Beth Johnston is spending a year in France learning the lingo and being nanny for three children.

Johnston off to Paris

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

When Beth Johnston starts back at university this week she might stop off for a baguette and cafe au lait, leaf through le Monde, and take a walk down the left bank of the Seine before getting to class.

This year the 21-year-old will be studying French in Paris.

She will be attending l'Etoile, a French language academy, and working as a nanny in the home where she will be living.

"It's going to be a really great way to learn to speak French. In school here I've learned to read and write French, but I can't speak it very well yet," says Johnston.

Johnston and her cousin are both taking part in French language programs in Paris, something they decided to do when a friend of theirs led the way.

The only expenses are the air flight and tuition of about $1,000. Room and board are free since she will be working as a nanny.

"I don't know what it'll be like to be a nanny, so I guess I'll just wing it," Johnston jokes. She will be responsible for cooking breakfast for the family's three children, and will help them with their English homework every night.

Johnston has completed two years at Guelph University, where she is studying Family and Social Relations, with a minor in French. She says many of her French classes will be put towards her degree at Guelph.

And although she says she is looking forward to "picking up the culture and seeing what's going on," she says she will miss her family, and especially the pet cat Sheba.

Dysart tax shortfall grows as recession stings landowners

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

The following are brief reports of items discussed at Monday's Dysart et al council meeting.

Waste of money

Most conventions are a waste of money, said Councillor Murray Fearrey responding to invitations for councillors and staff to attend an Ontario East Economic Development convention and a convention in Rockland for Eastern Ontario Reeves and Mayors. "There's a convention every week and a lot of the work could be done through correspondence,"

Fearrey said, adding Dysart has never abused taxpayers' money by attending many gatherings.

Tax arrears

There's more money owing to the municipality than there was last year at the same time, but "given the state of the economy it's surprising not worse," said Deputy-reeve Lloyd Leadbeater. Last year at this time, taxpayers owed the municipality $883,190 in 1990 taxes; this year $1,043,975 is outstanding in 1991 taxes. "We're not too concerned," said Reeve Bill Dysart. "We don't think it's generated by the tax revolt."

As another sign of the times, there will be four days of hearings to accommodate all the appeals of property assessments.

Boardwalk

WindsurFINN will be able to drive along the path on Head Lake, but only to unload surfboards. No vehicles can remain on the land the mainstreet store leases from Eva Little and council also stipulated this could be the only commercial use of that land.

The request raised concerns that with the increase of popularity of bass tournaments, there is a greater risk that zebra mussels will be introduced to the lake. Strict controls should ensure that boats from other waters are properly cleaned and emptied before being launched in Head Lake.

Winds of change

County politicians must sometimes feel as if the walls are falling in around them. It all used to be so much simpler. Running for public office was an act of service above self, a way to spend a few hours each week fulfilling your duties to society. Now, with the province saying "Do this, pay for that", and the paying populace up in arms, politicians shake their head and wonder how they got into this chaos. Indeed, the winds of change have blown with the hurricane force, scattering the debris of shattered reputations across the countryside. And yet the same angry mob which is shouting for more change can also be understanding and willing to help clean up the mess.

At first glance, the huge success of Friday's taxpayers' rally would scare away any potential candidates. Expectations are running high, and now that they have found their voice, the public will be quick to castigate any politician who doesn't pay attention. Yet the people are really just asking politicians to run their local bureaucracies the way they run their homes: Don't buy things you can't afford; tell your children it doesn't matter what Johnny has, the newest toy will stay on the store shelf; plan cautiously for the future; and respect your neighbours. Simplesness is still possible for those who can resist temptation.

And if people are going to ask so much from their politicians, then they must be willing to give something in return. As Paul Pagnuelo, a driving force behind Victoria County's tax revolt, pointed out, most people have been lazy and self-centred when it comes to choosing politicians. Democracy promises freedom to all, but unfortunately it doesn't demand any of its inherent responsibilities. How many people went beyond asking "When are you going to fix my road" when questioning candidates in 1988? How many asked the candidates anything at all? People are not forced to read the newspaper yet everyone can be an instant critic of council's decision. So for the tax coalition to demand the right to vote for or against tax increases, those souls brave enough to run for office have the right to demand an informed, unbiased and co-operative electorate.

Such changes have to come, and indeed, after years of doing little more than grumbling, people feel the time has come to get more involved. Judging by the orderly and productive way Friday night's rally was run, the tax coalition appears to be a helpful ally. It would have been a waste of time if the evening was just an opportunity for people to angrily vent their spleen. Any coalition has room for only one Frank Sheehans, the St. Catharines businessman whose fiery language got laughs but needed the reasoned tones of George Lansens, Gary Kenney and John Beachli to achieve anything worthwhile. The complaints aren't new; the solutions have to be.

Two other interesting points were raised at the meeting. If Lansens had been forced to close his auto parts factory because of a $56,000 increase in property taxes, more than 100 people would have been out of work. Those 100 people would then not have the money to visit the Highlands or buy a cottage here. We need to acknowledge the interdependence between communities and the need to leave behind our parochial interests as we work together for the common good. As well, Lansens quoted from a Wilfrid Laurier University economics professor who said the present structure of government breeds inefficiency. A department head gets paid according to his or her budget and staff. The administrator therefore asks for a $100,000 budget increase, saying the programs are essential to remain effective and modern. Council wrangles that down to $20,000 and feels proud of itself. But even that $20,000 is not really necessary. This sounds awfully familiar to the scenario presented in March: county council said "Sure, a 35 per cent budget increase is terrible, but we were presented with a 50 per cent increase and managed to bring it down. Why are you criticizing us?" Why did they allow the conversation to start at 50 per cent.

Let's have more tax coalition rallies.M.P.

Self interest equals high taxes

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

OUR READERS WRITE...

To the Editor:

RE: Tax Revolt or More Gripping
As hundreds of concerned and upset taxpayers gathered at the Haliburton Legion I was filled with both hope and despair as to the possibility of Tax Reform.

Even though the majority of us had to admit our past apathy over participating in government decision making, the show of numbers established that this apathy may indeed be at an end.

My sense of despair comes from the realization that as long as we continue with self-interest rather than a concern for the welfare of the whole, we don't have a chance in Hades of effecting Tax Reform.

Our Government at all levels have lost control over responsible spending because they have been lethargic enough to allow special interest groups complete reign over priorities in spending.

We heard people strike out in the public forum against teachers, Catholics, socialists, non-cottagers, etc., etc. In my opinion, unless we become responsible as individuals we cannot expect our Government to be responsible in their spending. The welfare of our community and our nation demands that politicians stop being coerced by special interest groups and concern themselves with the overall good of the country rather than concentrating on its parts.

It is time for us as citizens to stop forcing "my rights", "women's rights", "gay rights", "Catholic rights", etc., etc. down the throats of the country. We are Canadians and must be willing as individuals to sacrifice our individual self-interest for the benefit of society as a whole.

Unless we stop our special interest demands we are just another part of the problem. If we continue on with personal or group gripes, as somewhat demonstrated at the meeting, we will be a Tower of Babel and eventually fall apart within our own ranks.

In my opinion the problem with irresponsible tax spending has occurred because our politicians have refused to look at the welfare of the whole rather than the desires of the individuals.

We will only be contributing to the problem as a group of concerned taxpayers unless we change our selfish self-interest attitude and forget about striking out against individual groups or narrow-mindedly fight only for our little group. The only answer is responsible governing and spending. We will be successful if we demand this in all aspects of Government and forget our petty self-concerns.

Raymond G. Selbie,
Haliburton.

Hospital needs new TVs

To the Editor:

During a recent stay in the Haliburton Hospital, we noticed the few television sets available to patients were so ancient that some stations couldn't be received even though the hospital is on cable.

The administrators are in a position that monies that are available go towards new medical equipment and are unable to replace the existing TV sets although they agree it is an important part of patient care.

Because of the superb care given by Dr. Robert Heyes and his fellow members of the Family Medical Centre who staff the hospital and the dedicated nurses there, we have undertaken to raise the required $5,000 to provide a new television set for each of the 10 beds and one for the patient lounge.

Our fellow Realtors in Haliburton County started the ball rolling by holding a draw for four donated Blue Jay tickets and the Monmouth Volunteer Fire Department have pledged $500, plus a portion of the profits from an upcoming dance in Wilberforce.

By means of this letter, another letter to all residents of Harcourt Park and The Loop, we are asking anyone who wishes to do so to send their

WHEN THE CONVERSATION turns to the subject of the population of the village of Haliburton, different numbers seem to come to the surface. Someone told me recently that the figure had reached 1500 and still going. One of these days we hope to be able to quote the exact figures on how many people are now residing within the village limits. One thing is for sure and that is the numbers are a lot higher than the old figure of 1200 that has been kicked around for many years. This number is certainly low when one considers the new people who have moved into our community during the past few years. We also understand that the local council is considering the matter of extending the town limits, and if this does happen the numbers will go up even higher. Some people are concerned that the village is losing its identity that the community is no longer a close-knit family. We are in a new ball game and I think that it's all for the best. Those who move here to become permanent residents, in most cases, turn out to be first class citizens with new ideas that keeps the community on the move.

The tennis courts at Rotary Beach in Haliburton have been a hive of activity this past summer and early fall. More and more people seem to be making use of the courts this year. A tennis club has been formed and Art Ouellette tells me that volunteers are needed for next year to look after the duties of the club. If you can help please get in touch with Art.

In one of my recent columns I was telling our readers that a race horse named Haliburton Ruckus owned by Gary Vasey and Don Finn would be running in a race with a $250,000 purse. We are sorry to report that the horse was badly jostled leaving the starting gate, and lost all chance of winning and finished out of the money. The race was held at Woodbine.

Glen Sharpley, former National Hockey League player and the new owner of The Sports Stop, will be the guest speaker at the weekly meeting of the Haliburton Rotary Club to be held on Thursday, September 26.

The citizens of Haliburton and surrounding area are soon going to have to make a big decision. Do you want to have the Boy Scouts in Haliburton or does it really matter to you whether they are here or hit. I can tell you this much — at the present time volunteers are urgently needed and the present Boy Scout executive tell me that if help is not forthcoming, Boy Scouts in Haliburton will cease to exist. If you are interested in the Boy Scouts continuing in Haliburton please attend the Haliburton Boy Scouts meeting to be held at the Drag River Building this coming Thursday evening at 8:00 p.m. We understand that some parents are using this as a baby sitting program when they dump their boys off and expect someone to look after them while they go merrily on their way to take in their favourite pastime. The present workers tell me they have had it up to here and they are getting sick of being taken for granted. Get out and take part or the time will soon come when the Boy Scouts will be out of here.

The final count is in and we are glad to report that well over 2,000 people took time out this summer to visit the Haliburton Highlands Museum in Glebe Park in Haliburton. We understand that this figure is not a record but a very good average.

Gary Brohman, who is a very good local tennis player, has been putting out the challenge trying to encourage a little opposition to play against. In a game last week he finally met his match when Walt McKechnie took him to the cleaners. Gary told me that Walt was really on his game and that he couldn't match his outstanding play.

In my column last week I made the statement that the Echo Hills Legion Apartment building would be ready for its grand opening on October 1st. Dale Walker told me that I stand to be corrected and that the apartments won't be ready for occupancy until January of 1992. Come to think about it it's not too far off.

A few leftover notes . . . Max Fetterley, a former Haliburton resident, was renewing old acquaintances in Haliburton last week . . . Mrs. Heather Joss has returned to her home in Cheshire, England after spending two weeks in Haliburton with her parents Jim and Betty Inglis . . . Shawn Hagerman and Curtis Eastmure attended a Blue Jays game at the SkyDome in Toronto last Wednesday evening . . . Mrs. Mary Packard is spending a five week vacation with friends and relatives in different parts of Scotland . . . It's Civic Holiday here this coming Monday, September 16 . . . Good to see Bob Thompson around again following an illness that sent him to the hospital.

POINTS OF VIEW

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE

MARTHA PERKINS

AS I MADE MY WAY toward my truck, I realized that in the previous two-hour conversation, neither Clarke MacDonald nor I had mentioned the word homosexual. Not that I make it my custom to talk about homosexuality, but when you're interviewing the former moderator of the church which has been embroiled in the "h-issue" for five years, you'd think the subject would come up at least once.

But I wasn't chastizing myself over this now obvious oversight; instead I was rather glad that we had gone beyond rehearsing an argument which has no end so could focus on what to me was the real issue: what gives some people their unshakable faith in God.

I was still carrying with me my frustration with an interview last winter with Bishop Desmond Hunt, who was in Haliburton as part of St. George's 125th anniversary. A person who has spent a lifetime formulating ideas, searching his own heart and the hearts of others, he's not easily crammed into a 2,000-word feature. Where to begin? With Bishop Hunt (and his wife Naomi and Rev. Kim Beard) we talked about what faith means in a secular society which doesn't want to believe in God but finds an emptiness where God used to be in our mores and customs. This might sound like rather heady reading for a small community newspaper, but in my mind at least, this is something all of us are dealing with, in cities and small towns across the country. (If we're not, we should be.) It's just about being human.

For me the article was a disappointment — it struggled with a huge topic without ever really finding a toehold, a secure point from which to begin the climb towards understanding. So when I recently had the opportunity to interview Clarke MacDonald, who has been cottaging in the Highlands for 12 years, I wanted to make up for my mistakes with Bishop Hunt. By concentrating on Mr. MacDonald's youth and the people who shaped his beliefs, I thought I could find out where faith is born.

Clarke MacDonald, a retired United Church minister, a former UC moderator, and chairman of the board of the Observer, has a voice and an aptitude for telling stories, which after all, is what the Old and New Testaments are all about. His childhood is the stuff of CanLit novels and East Coast folk songs. His adulthood is the stuff of political activism and challenging sermons. Unfortunately, this meant that to keep the article to a reasonable length — and already my stories are unreasonably long — we didn't talk about his wife and family, the solace and contentment he finds at his cottage, or the big mess the United Church got itself into when it struggled publicly to find homosexuals' role in the church. Once again I would be frustrated with an article. (The story on Mr. MacDonald appeared August 20.)

But as I was driving away from the MacDonalds' cottage, I did realize another thing for which I am glad. Clarke MacDonald is one of those people you can't help but respect and yet don't necessarily always agree with — and that strengthens your respect. He says what he believes, and he believes strongly and with a purity that comes from the heart, not just the head. His learning is not from books, but from life; his faith is not from attending church every Sunday, but by living the love he feels.

He's like a woman we were talking about at work the other day, a neighbour, now passed away, whose kindness would never be forgotten. She'd walk to the school through a snow storm to pick up children whose mother was stranded an hour's drive away. She'd give you flowers and vegetables from her garden. She made every neighbourhood child her grandchild. She also had a very deep faith. It's not something she tried to impress you with by preaching or quoting verses from the Bible; in fact she didn't really talk about it at all. You knew it simply because she lived it. Now there's a story idea.

Of toothpicks and teddy bears

I WAS READING the Star last week when I came across a story about a man who'd built a life-sized figure of Christ out of toothpicks in his garage, and I realized that we've kept up with what's been going on in the animal world in this column, but we really have neglected reporting on what people are doing for quite a while...

Apparently God spoke to Bob Haifley about five years ago, and that got him started on his toothpick crucifixion sculpture, which took the 40-year-old waterworks employee 2,500 hours and 65,000 toothpicks to complete...

I have been unable to find any formal name for this remarkable hobby — which is definitely not my type of thing — but have found out what vexillologists, oenophiles, and scrippophiliacs do in their spare time.

A vexillologist is a person who studies flags. One of them works for our federal government, overseeing their supply and making sure they aren't hung upside down on state visits when foreign dignitaries arrive. Last year, there were 19 of these events — and 798 ceremonial occasions involving his million-dollar inventory of flags...

Oenophiles are just people who like to study and keep wines, while scrippophilia addicts collect old stock certificates and bonds — usually from defunct mining and railroad companies. (I am kind of interested in these myself, if you have any you'd like to show me).

But, if you think you'd like to collect things, consider the storage problems collectors have. One writer, who no doubt fears computers, keeps 11 manual typewriters under her bed, using one of them to write her books.

That's not as weird to me as New Yorker Allen Murphy who had specially built velvet-lined drawers installed under his bed to store his collection of 45 pairs of velvet slippers.

Or check with Leo Lerman, an editor who kept a spare refrigerator full of books to giveaway to friends...and stores his dish towels, aprons and potholders in the dishwasher...

And if you're not a collector, then maybe you'd like to be a contestant. Martha Perkins passed me a story from England about the Blackawton International Festival of Worm Charming, which was disrupted when someone used a liquid beyond the accepted cider to coax the little squirmers out of the ground.

If charming worms isn't your thing, then you could join the folks in Spivey's Corner, North Carolina, for the National Hollerin' Contest. People in the hill country up that way say that's how they used to keep in touch before CBs and the phone...

And, in Talkeetna, Alaska, their equivalent of the fall fair is the Moose Dropping Festival, with the highlight being the Moose Toss, where participants pay to pitch dried winter moose droppings onto a table covered with numbers.

In some ways, it's not unlike the Bossy Bingo that was being played in fields near fall fairs in this area a couple of years back. In this case, the one whose droppings stay on the highest number wins and gets the prize.

Local expert Gene Jenne says "They're hard and egg-shaped and they don't stay in once place," which apparently makes it a real contest. And over in the craft displays, you'll see that they paint faces on them, make jewelry out of them.

"There's no limit to people's imagination," he says.

He's right, of course, and a lot of it goes into schemes to make money. Like the summer camp program for your teddy bear, at Cub Kamp in Spirit Lake, Idaho.

Teddy bear collectors, incidentally, are known as arctophiles, and a collection is known as 'a hug of bears.' They have three magazines devoted to their hobby in North American and Britain, with fashions, yet, and interviews with well-known arctophiles like Gary Burghoff, who played 'Radar' in *M*A*S*H*, and Canadian jazz pianist Oscar Peterson.

Last year, 150 people paid $25.00 plus mailing costs, to send their teddy bear away to Cub Kamp for a week, and receive photos of the bear enjoying beach, barbeque and sporting activities...

Maybe that would make a profitable way for one of our local lodges to fill some of their empty spaces in the 1992 season...

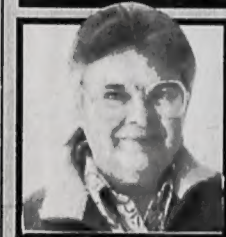

PIC OF THE PAST

Some people living in Gooderham might see themselves in this 1931 photo of students at the Gooderham School. The two-storey school on the hill caught every north wind that blew, says retired teacher Aileen Robertson, who was known as Miss Simpson in those days. Three of the rooms in the old school were used for classrooms, one for each of the three teachers who taught students from Grades 1 to 9 among them. A fourth room was used as a community hall. The school was torn down to make room for the new one-storey school, which now teaches children from Kindergarten to Grade 3. Our thanks to Mrs. Robertson of Haliburton for the photo and information.

Getting tough about recycling

NORTHERN LIGHTS

VIRGINIA MUENZEL

IN ONE YEAR and three months, the Ontario government is committed to total recycling. It's supposed to be an accomplished fact. If the NDP Minister of the Environment will just have the courage to remain firm under the onslaught of threats and bribes from big business, perhaps Ontario will take a gigantic step towards preserving what beauty hasn't been destroyed.

We had some visitors from B.C. over the Labor Day weekend. They came here to camp with the chap's sister and friend. The B.C. couple had come to Ontario with some trepidation because many of their friends had told them that Ontario was a polluted wasteland with putrid water, no fish, and air you couldn't breathe. I believe we managed to dispel that image. (Although, the next day they were to drive over the Burlington Bay bridge on their way to Niagara Falls.)

But it makes me wonder how many other people have this awful misconception of Ontario. How did they get it? And how can we replace that image with a more accurate picture?

I don't agree with everything any of the political parties in power do, but the NDP's original Minister of Environment did a wonderful and wise thing when she made Toronto responsible for its own garbage. And when she gave a real deadline to recycling, it meant we've got to stop passing the buck, giving lame excuses, and get down to the business at hand.

Personally, I think the secret to the whole thing is co-operation. Haliburtonians are going to have an opportunity to exhibit their skills in this area in the very near future. Len Munt is now organizing a test plan for the collection and recycling of cardboard boxes, a major contributor to our landfill sites.

The way the plan will probably operate is that Len Munt will find an individual who is interested in doing some research and ultimately the weekly collection of collapsed boxes from a certain group of businesses. A committee, including Andy Campbell of Haliburton County Development Corporation, Len Pizzey of the Echo, Mark Stagg of County Planning, Ray Langdon of Black's Hardware, Len Munt of Waste Management, and myself (the nag), will attempt to procure a compactor and a dry storage building somewhere in the Municipality of Dysart. We will be speaking with the municipality within a month.

Of course, from observing other communities, it is easy to understand that the only way to make these things viable, is for someone to be able to make a living from it. That is one of our goals. But Mark Stagg and Andy Campbell have decided to at least attempt to take the issue one step further. Because the biggest problem with recycling, is the high cost of trucking the stuff down to the plants in the city, they are looking into the feasibility of creating a cardboard recycling industry here.

It's a very interesting concept indeed. There are no guarantees. What there probably will be, are many hurdles. But the possibilities are that we could 1) greatly reduce the input to our landfill sites, 2) prolong their life, 3) reduce our costs in the long run, and 4) actually create one or more jobs.

What we need most of all is cooperation. And we might as well, because, as I said, come the end of 1992, we've got to do it anyway.

DOWN OUR ROAD

SHARON LYNCH

ARE YOU GOING to the meeting tonight?" Joe asked Myrna. He had called to speak with her husband but before the man came on the line, Joe asked her the question first. There was a pause, then she answered uncertainly.

"What meeting is that, Joe?"

"That one that's been advertised in the paper this week — you know, the big, full page announcement that a meeting was going to be held tonight about our high taxes and that kind of thing. You and Sam going?" Joe couldn't believe that there was anyone left who did not know about the meeting. After seeing it in the paper, it was just about all he could think of for the rest of the week.

"Just a sec, Joe. I'll let you talk to Sam," Myrna said and next thing a man's voice boomed over the phone.

"Hi Joe — what do you know?" shouted the voice, followed by a loud, drawn out laugh. Sam always greeted his neighbour with the same phrase and always thought it uproariously funny. Joe just smiled. Sam was Sam. Joe then repeated his question about attending the meeting, to Sam. Sam had been toying with the idea of going, but wasn't sure if there was any point.

"It'll probably be the same old stuff said by the same old crowd who just want to get elected and then nothing changes. I think the ball game would be more interesting," noted Sam. But Joe could hear the hesitancy in Sam's voice and knew that it would not take much convincing to get Sam to come out.

He was right. After reminding Sam of some of the phrases used in the ad, words designed to stir the emotions, Sam decided both he and Myrna would come that evening. "I guess hope springs eternal, eh Joe?" laughed Sam as he ended the conversation and went to tell Myrna.

Joe was glad. He did not want to walk into the hall by himself. While he had wanted to go to hear what these people had to say, Joe did not like crowds and was basically a shy person. He needed the company of friends to bolster his courage. So shortly after seven o'clock the three of them piled into Joe's pickup and headed for town.

All the way in, they speculated as to how many others would show up and what would be said. Would there be one speech or a whole bunch? "Oh Lordie, I hope not," groaned Sam. Would the local politicians be there or other people running for election? Who was paying for it and the ads too? While they mulled over these questions, there was an overriding thought at the back of their minds. Maybe, just maybe, the people organizing this meeting had something new to say, something that would make a difference in the way things had been going in their part of the county, in fact the whole darn country for that matter, in the last few years.

"I'm sick of sitting around the kitchen table complaining with you and everyone else about what's going on in the country," stated Joe, a hint of impatience creeping into his voice. "Maybe it's time we tried to change things for the better. You know — action instead of just words." Sam and Myrna nodded agreement but didn't say much. Joe hoped they were saving it for the meeting and not keeping quiet because they thought he was crazy.

They arrived fifteen minutes before the meeting was to start. Two blocks before they reached the hall, they knew they'd have a problem finding a parking spot. Cars, trucks and vans lined the streets. Even the liquor store parking lot was filled. Joe told Sam and Myrna to get out and he'd join them in the

BE A POWER SAVER

One day John hopes to build R-2000 homes.
But he'll have to go to school first.

And we don't mean high school. Before John, or any builder, can build a home to R-2000 standards he must take specialized training. A higher standard of construction.

Many people believe that the building code makes certain that the new home they purchase will be built to the highest possible energy efficiency standards.

Unfortunately that's not correct. The building code is a minimum standard.

But one type of home is leading the way in energy efficiency technology, the R-2000 home. It is like no other. The R-2000 home is built to a higher standard of new home construction supported by the housing industry, Ontario Hydro, manufacturers and the provincial and federal governments.

A $2,000 incentive.

R-2000 homes are constructed with a greater attention to detail. The result is a home in which drafts and cold spots are virtually eliminated and moisture build-up in walls and attics is prevented. A heat recovery ventilator (HRV) delivers a steady supply of fresh air, reduces condensation and controls ventilation. In fact, because of its energy efficiency, Ontario Hydro offers a $2,000 incentive to purchasers in areas without natural gas service.

Individually inspected and certified.

The R-2000 'Better built home' is built by specially trained builders, is individually inspected and is given its own certificate of performance to ensure it meets strict energy and ventilation standards.

Student champions pole vault

Decathlete Michael Smith inspires, coaches Gelert youth

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

After getting advice from Canada's top decathlon athlete, a local teenager wants to help fellow students at HHSS master the complex skills of pole vaulting.

"If I can get more kids doing well and there's more support for it, the school will have to say we've got more kids with potential so we'll have to spend some extra money," says Endres Weber.

The 16-year-old wants to coach pole vaulting this winter, using the techniques he learned at a summer track and field "camp" at the University of Toronto and York University. For two weeks, he and friend Craig Mann joined hundreds of other athletes under the guidance of national track and field coach Andy Higgins.

While there, Weber and Mann also got a few pointers from Michael Smith, who would later win a silver medal at the World Track and Field Championships in Tokyo.

"He's a great guy," Weber says of the 23-year-old decathlon athlete. "Most guys are more self-centred. He's really down to earth and appreciates helping other people. He takes time out of his own work to help you with things you need help with."

"I sure was a lot better for it." There are not many pole vaulters at HHSS. It's a complex sport, explains coach Paul Morissette, because it requires speed, strength and a gymnast's agility. A single pole can cost $500 and when Weber broke one at a meet in June, the school didn't have another good pole. Other schools will have a few dozen. Five hundred dollars at HHSS can go a long way in buying equipment for other sports enjoyed by more students.

Weber says the most important technique to master is planting your pole properly as you prepare to twist your back over the horizontal bar. "If you're tall and fast and plant hard, the jump will take off. If you can't do that right, nothing will go right."

Most back injuries are caused by an improper plant. Weber hurt his back in the spring but at the U of T camp, he focused on landing safely on the mat. (It helped that there were $50,000 mats at the indoor/outdoor facilities.) He also learned back exercises.

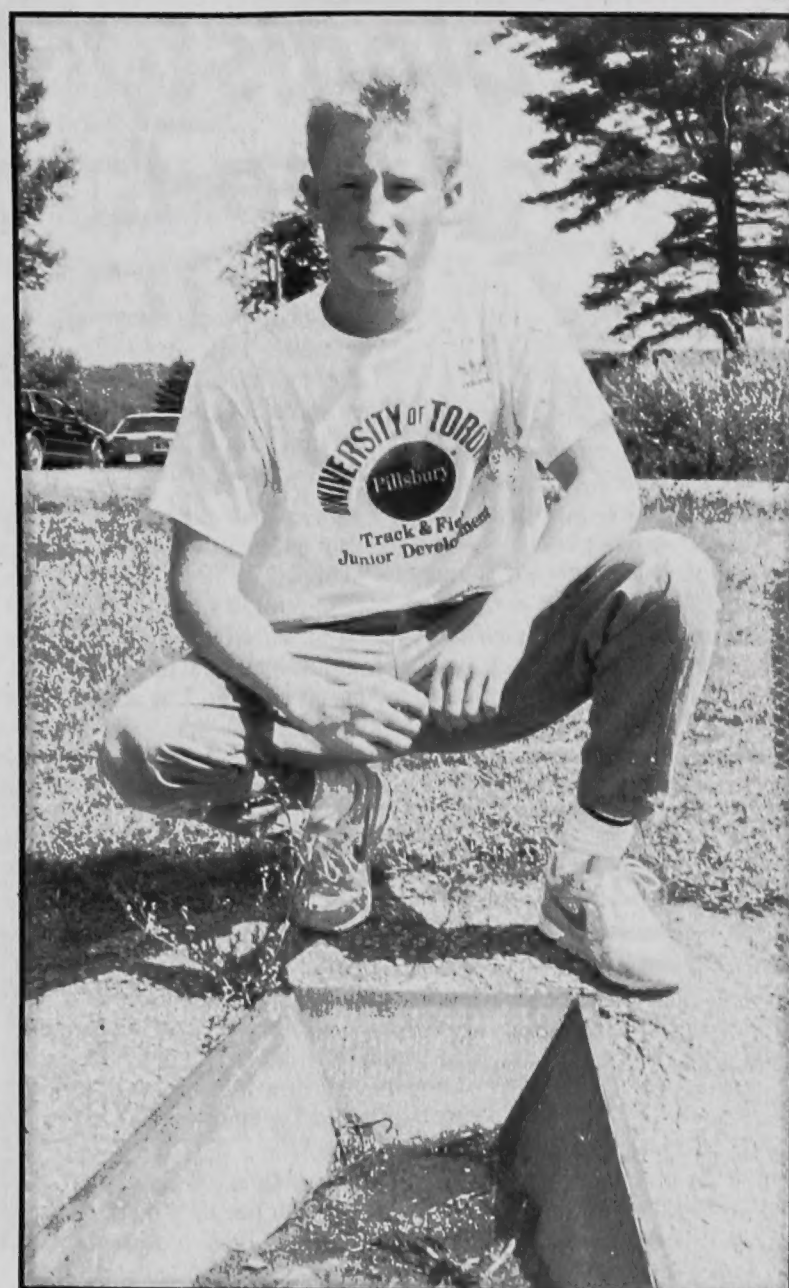

Ninety per cent of the time was spent practising individual components of the jump, the Gelert teen says. Again and again he'd run down the runway, bounce off a bounce board and grab onto a rope to swing himself up through the air. "You hit the rope just as you'd plant a pole to try to get a feel of that position. It locks it into your mind so you don't have to think about what you're doing and it happens automatically."

Weber became interested in the pole vault by watching fellow HHSS student Dan Wullemme. "It's really exciting to jump and it's really exciting to watch."

For the first jumps, you don't go upside down. And it's only after a lot of practice that you bend your pole. Weber did well enough in the 1991 season to reach the Ontario Federation of Secondary School Athletics meet in Sudbury — that's when his pole snapped. He's now ranked 10th in Ontario's junior division.

But earlier, at the regional meet in Brockville, Weber jumped 3.5 metres; the record at the HHSS field is 3.07. The Canadian record is just over 5 metres.

GETTING READY FOR THE BIG JUMP: Endres Weber spent two weeks at the University of Toronto and York University this summer, learning the skills which promise to make him HHSS's best pole vaulter.

Jug City overpowered by Barrie

by JIM MILNE

Westside Jug City lost 8-3 to Barrie in Muskoka District Soccer action last Sunday. Barrie scored early in the first half but the visiting Haliburton team came back strongly with two goals. Nico Haedicke, on loan from the High school Senior Redmen, scored the first goal. Cecil Smith scored the second goal. On again, however, a lack of substitutes hampered the older Jug City team. Before the half ended Barrie scored twice more to lead the game 4-2.

Jug City opened the half strongly when Hans Walter scored to the team within one goal of Barrie. Unfortunately Barrie kept coming on and scored 4 unanswered goals as Jug City tired.

In spite of the widening score the Haliburton team continued to play well together. Darren Parson from the Junior Soccer Redmen played effectively at right forward. He should be a team leader when the Redmen open their season in Fenelon Falls this Friday.

Jug City finish their regular season against Orillia in Minden, Sunday, Sept. 15 at 1:00 p.m.

Terry Fox Run set for Sunday

Terry Fox's bravery and dedication will never die as long as people continue their support of the annual Terry Fox Run.

Whether people walk, or bike, or run, or wheel the 10 kilometre route, participants are invited to take part in this year's Run on Sunday afternoon in memory of the young man who died of cancer while running across Canada. Those who don't feel up to the route can sponsor someone who does.

The Run starts at 2 p.m. at the Government Dock at Haliburton. Participants are asked to come early to register.

The money raised is used to continue research to find a cure and better treatment of Canada's second highest cause of death. This year, 109,000 Canadians will be diagnosed with cancer, bringing the total number of people under medical care for cancer up to 300,000.

Last year the Run garnered $3.1-million in Ontario alone.

Genealogist tells how to tend the family tree

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

There are few plants so difficult to grow as the family tree, but hopeful gardeners were given a few tips at a genealogical meeting in Minden on Saturday.

"It's not an easy subject, not an easy task," said Angus Baxter, an internationally renowned genealogist. "It is easy to go astray. There are so many obstacles already that it is essential you don't create your own."

About 40 people gathered for the one-hour talk given by the Lakefield-based researcher, who has written six books on ancestor hunting, four of which are available in Canada.

Baxter laid out some common mistakes and misguided strategies which people often fall into while looking for their roots. "Don't look at what famous people have your last name and then try to trace yourself to them," he said. "We'd all like to have famous people as ancestors, but in reality few of us do. Start with yourself, and trace from there." Baxter said he has traced his family back 600 years, and they were all and always sheep farmers in the same valley. No royalty, no heroes, just ordinary people who ended up producing him.

Another common error is to assume all people with the same name are related if you trace back far enough. "My name, Baxter, is the origin of the word baker, and every village had a baker, and someone called Baxter or Baker. If there were 10,000 villages in Sax-on England, there were 10,000 families with the same name."

He said most of the searching will be done not by running around glamorous places, but by pen and paper. "Be prepared to do a lot of writing. If you say you're not good at writing you might as well give up."

"Write to parsons, ministers, archivists — every place possible. Write to everyone you possibly can. There are no short-cuts, no easy way to find your family tree."

"Be willing to write reminder letters to people. Don't give up if you don't get a reply to your first letter."

And, of course, always include a self addressed stamped envelope with your request for information. "Some record offices get upwards of 10,000 requests a year. Not even a government will be willing to cover the postage for that. We're talking thousands of dollars a year. They will reply to the few hundred which have return postage."

He also warned people to make sure they put their addresses on their letters as well as the envelopes. "because I don't know what you do, but what I do when I get a letter is throw away the envelope."

Baxter said no one should assume that the way they spell their name now is the way it has always been spelt. "One hundred and fifty years ago almost nobody could burgh, so they had to drive all the way back, and by the time they got there they had wasted half their vacation getting nothing."

A very important source of information is relatives and friends of ancestors. "Make sure you speak to everybody. You'll not believe what little bits of information people have stored up in their heads. People will be able to fill in missing pieces of your family's history, but only if you ask them about it."

But he also warned people to be careful with what they're told.

"You'll get very little reward or encouragement. You'll find it a very lonely plow to furrow."

"I'm not saying your relatives will lie, but people tend to embellish the family history and stories become exaggerated the longer they are told for."

He told hopeful genealogists to prepare for a lot of work. "You'll get very little reward or encouragement. You'll find it a very lonely plow to furrow. Some relatives will think what you're doing is just stupid, and others will be scared of the skeletons swinging in the closets."

The deep, dark secrets many families keep make them suspicious of anyone researching the family, but Baxter said these secrets do not interest anyone but family members, and even then are hardly scandalous. "Are you going to find an ancestor born out of wedlock? Maybe, but who really cares?"

He also suggested people make sure no-one else has already traced the family tree. Often one relative will have done some work

Police say they will be checking the cottage, and charging any unauthorized people there with trespassing.

Police also received a noise complaint from a cottager on Grants Road, in Cardiff Township, about mini bikes roaring up and down the road. Police say they will patrol the road more often.

Weber vaults for victory

Coach Morissette says this year Weber should concentrate on building up his speed on the runway.

"At the school we try to encourage personal bests," Morissette says. If this year Weber cleared 3 metres, next year it should be 4. Above all, Weber has to pursue this goal while maintaining his love of the sport.

"I've seen a lot of kids who start out early burn out," says Morissette, adding the school prefers students to get a taste of all sports instead of concentrating all their energies on one. If not, by the time an athlete gets to the truly competitive stage, "they start not having fun — it becomes a chore."

And even though HHSS doesn't have all the high-tech facilities enjoyed by city schools, Morissette doesn't think Weber is at a disad-vantage, especially as the teenager plans to travel to York University throughout the winter to train. In the 1984 Olympics, one of Canada's running medals was won by a girl who grew up in a small town outside of Sudbury.

Weber knows he still has a long way to go but he has set his goals high — five metres high. "You just have to keep going," he says. "I've come so far and I'm at a fairly good height (6'1") and growing. You have to spend extra effort to get extra results."

"Right now I just want to take it as far as I can."

Moth booklet offers info

An information package titled "Gypsy Moth in Ontario" has been jointly published by the Gypsy Moth Management Committee and the Ministry of Natural Resources. The 16-page booklet will be of particular interest to property owners and other people affected by gypsy moth. The booklet is free and is now available at MNR district offices and county or municipal offices throughout southern Ontario.

"The booklet informs people about Gypsy Moth, a non-native forest insect, and lets them know what they can do as individuals or groups of property owners to protect the health of their trees," said Dysart Reeve Bill Davis, Gypsy Moth Management Committee chairman.

There has been significant public concern in the last few years about the gypsy moth. When insect populations are high the caterpillar stage can strip trees of their leaves in late spring or early summer. Private and municipally-organized aerial spray programs have taken place since the mid-eighties to protect tree foliage.

The "Gypsy Moth in Ontario" booklet consolidates the basic information about gypsy moth in an understandable form.

Natural controls of gypsy moth are also discussed. Natural controls are becoming established in Ontario and will ultimately be more effective than human intervention in controlling gypsy moth populations. Natural controls, in addition to human intervention, can help protect tree health in high value areas during periods of high infestation.

MNR will continue to provide leadership and education regarding the effects of gypsy moth and how to control it with minimum social, economic and environmental effects.

MPP reflects on his first year

DRAINVILLE'S DIARY
MPP
Dennis Drainville

THE END OF MY FIRST YEAR as your MPP is an appropriate time to reflect on what I've tried to accomplish for you, the residents of Victoria-Haliburton.

I ran for public office because I believe that there are changes that need to take place in the way our government operates. Government needs to be more democratic and open to the questions and suggestions of the people. It must reflect their best interests without an arrogant "we know best" attitude that people increasingly reject.

There have been enormous challenges before us during this past year. Canada's very existence as a Unified nation is more precarious than ever before. Our province is in the midst of the worst recession since the 1930s.

We must face the fact that, right now in Ontario, nearly half-a-million people are on U.I.C. and nearly a million of us are dependent on social assistance.

Over 400,000 of these are children. It is essential that we create real jobs and put people back to work!

A major challenge for me has been attempting to respond to the needs of the many people who contacted my office. While we continue to help people individually with their problems, we try to help people find and use community resources and help them to become their own best advocates. I have tried to help individuals and organizations to become better equipped to help "Give a person fish and you have fed them for a day — Show the person how to fish and you have fed them for life."

To maintain the quality of service with the 2-1/2 staff people by budget allows has meant trying to supplement their efforts with the new technology of an answering machine. There are literally hundreds of cases that need individual attention. Meanwhile my office is receiving over 100 calls every day.

My goals have not changed in the first year of being at Queen's Park. I carry to Toronto the concerns that are given to me by the people of Victoria-Haliburton. I hear them in my office, on farms, in villages and at public functions from Thursday night to Sunday night each week as I spend that time in my riding.

I also take seriously my role in the legislature, as Chair of the Confederation Committee and as Parliamentary Assistant to Municipal Affairs. This is demanding work, but I'm glad to have the opportunity and privilege to serve the people of Victoria-Haliburton through these many activities.

Digging for roots and this will help in the ancestor hunt.

Libraries are good sources of information. He also suggested people enquire with the Mormon church. They have a vast collection of genealogical data in their library in Salt Lake City, which is open to everyone, regardless of faith. Mormons collect genealogical data so that members of their church can have their ancestors baptized and posthumously made members of the church.

Baxter said one of the most enjoyable things about genealogy is "putting leaves on the bare branches. It's amazing what you can find out about the social history of the time and how your ancestors lived. I can tell you how many sheep my ancestors had, how much they sold them for, the brand they used on them, and on and on.

"This to me is the fascination of the family tree. Don't be discouraged, don't give up. You will succeed in the end. It's a magic journey. I can't think of anything more interesting than discovering what your family was doing 200 years ago."

Cancer support group reaches out

MORE LETTERS FROM ECHO READERS...

To the Editor:

In September, 1989 I returned home after a lovely summer at my cottage and went to a doctor in Toronto. I was found to have cancer and had surgery and follow up treatment in December, 1989 and February, 1990. I attended a few cancer support groups in the city and in the summer of 1990 came back to Haliburton.

I had read in the Echo ads about the Daffodil group in Haliburton and I ventured out to a meeting, taking with me a neighbour/friend from Toronto who also had cancer. I took a friend because I was afraid to go to a small town group. I assumed they would all know one another, be sort of a clique and certainly wary of a city visitor.

Was I ever pleased to find a warm, caring group of people who welcomed us then and have welcomed us back this year as well. Despite the heat, the large, bright room at the church is cool and we look forward to attending the Daffodil meetings where we find people who know all too well our fears. They share their strength and hope for each other. There are not only cancer patients there but friends, relatives, caregivers and volunteers as well.

Yes, cancer can be like a bogeyman in the dark, but there are people who can make life bright and scare the bogeyman away — right here in Haliburton. My sincere thanks to all of them. Helen and I will join you again next year.

Sally-Ann Kerman,
North York.

P.S. For anyone interested, The Daffodil group meets on the last Thursday of each month at 2:00 p.m. at St. George's Anglican Church.

Natural shorelines

To the Editor:

One has to sympathize with M. Bronson whose severance problem Brian Rodnick wrote about in the Echo of Aug. 20.

On our "restricted" lakes you can see properties with lush green lawns to the water's edge. I know many of these people put hundreds of pounds (kilos?) of commercial fertilizer on their pride and joy each year. They can do nothing else except pour nutrients into our water yet M.N.R. says nothing.

People like M. Bronson who guarantee to leave a natural shoreline should be encouraged, not frustrated.

Bill Valentine,
Norland.

Snowbirds can't vote

To the Editor:

There are quite a few residents who are not able to vote in our Municipal elections — or advanced polls!

We are retired people who are lucky enough to go to Florida or other warm climates. We usually leave sometime in October for a six month period.

Gwen Jessen, (Mrs. O.J. Jessen), RRI Haliburton.

Eulogy for Clarke's

To the Editor:

A Eulogy for Clarke's Collectibles.

Today is my last trip to Clarke's Collectibles. It is going out of business — Taxed out of existence!

Clarke's Collectibles is just down the Lochlin Road, turn left at the old school house, go past the crumbling shell of the old factory, cross the green bridge and slow down — when you see the wagon wheel, you're there!

Whenever I go I have to decide whether to explore the Bargain Bus for super values or head straight to the barn for better treasures.

If the weather is rainy or life slows down too much, we just head out to Clarke's.

If we're lucky we'll be welcomed by Harvey's warm smile above that bushy beard!

Ethel sits behind the counter and patiently explains the mysteries of some of the old kitchen utensils — the suet chopper, the raisin seeder and the hot dog cooker. My husband pulls up a stool and visits with her, while I comb the barn for bargains.

I pick up some old sleigh bells and their sound triggers memories for my husband of childhood days on the farm, when his father drove them to school by horse and sleigh.

Faded photographs stir your imagination and make you pause to wonder of years gone by — a young man, standing so proudly by his new bicycle, handsomely attired, a young couple on their wedding day. Why would such beautiful photos end up in an old store for sale to strangers.

I discover some softly-tinted glass insulators and am told they can be used as door stops, or inverted to become candle holders! I end up buying five!

It's an intriguing mental exercise to figure out new ways to use some of these items people have long since discarded.

The stainless steel, copper bottomed kettle I found in the bus is so well made and has such a shrill insistent whistle that we say it saves on hydro.

Our cottage is filled with such special finds from Clarke's!

It's been a great place to shop in a recession. You never feel guilty about spending money there, because the prices are more than right and the merchandise unlike anything in the regular stores.

We will truly miss Clarke's Collectibles. Summers in Haliburton won't quite be the same without our visits to Ethel and Harvey's place in the woods.

Thank you both, for providing such a unique and pleasurable place to browse and shop.

Toni and Joe Clarke,
Toronto.

Not just the minority

Editor's Note: The following letter was sent to The Honourable Zanana Akanda, Minister of Community and Social Services.

Dear Ms. Akande:

I am writing to protest your new direction in the funding of Child Resource/Drop-In Centres. It has come to my attention that this Government has urged C.H.A.C.E. Inc. in Haliburton County, and all other such centres in Ontario, to change their mandate to specifically target informal caregivers (babysitters, paid or unpaid) to be their primary responsibility as far as programming and support, providing workshops, information and directories for childcare. The problem with this is that in Haliburton only 9 percent of the users of these centres are caregivers. To specifically target the needs of this 9 percent as the main group to provide services for, overlooks and insults the remaining 91 percent.

The primary reason I have supported and made use of C.H.A.C.E. is that it does provide support, encouragement, materials, information and social activity for parents who choose to stay at home with their young children. The M.C.S.S. has argued that since funding comes from "Child Care Dollars" the primary target must therefore be Childcare. You are mistaken! The money comes from "Taxpayer Dollars" that are being irresponsibly used to benefit a minority group. You are taking away staff time, materials, etc. from the majority, those that could clearly use support and encouragement for the job they do of raising their own children.

I would appreciate a response to these concerns.

Loir Roberts,
Haliburton.

Rekindling the old, Canadian feelings

DOWN OUR ROAD SHARON LYNCH

hall once he found a spot to leave his truck. He watched as they were quickly swallowed by the crowd pushing its way toward the hall's big double doors. Joe nearly hit a pedestrian as he pulled up to the intersection. There were people everywhere.

Having finally taken care of his truck, Joe, the crowd hater, eased his way through the throng clustered around the hall entranceway and the door going into the meeting hall itself. The chairs had long run out and people were standing around, trying to find a good spot so they could see the people sitting at the head table at the front of the hall. Sam and Myrna were off to the side. Someone brought a chair for Myrna and Sam insisted she take it before someone else did.

With Myrna sitting in front of them, the three neighbours looked around. They were amazed at what they saw. Not just the sheer number of people, although that in itself was impressive. But homemakers, clerks, senior citizens, and a sprinkling of politicians. If there was anything the crowd shared in common, it was that few were very young and non looked very rich or very poor. "I guess this is what the experts call the middle class," Joe thought, feeling quite at home in the crowd. He recognized most of the faces.

Then the speakers started. Each took a turn introducing themselves and telling the audience what they were trying to do. They recalled their own experiences as they came to grips with the political realities of life in Canada at the present time. Small scale concerns in the grand scheme of things, to be sure; but all with a common thread. Frustration over high taxes and no control over where those taxes went; politicians who ignored the wishes of those who put them in office. "I want to feel like a citizen again, not a subject," stated one speaker passionately and the crowd applauded with enthusiasm.

With every speaker the audience moved closer together emotionally. It became obvious they liked what they were hearing and had been waiting to hear it for a long time. The speakers were touching their frustrations and anger and urging them to take back responsibility for their political institutions.

Joe left that meeting a changed man. He felt the way he thought his forbears must have felt as they struggled for a fledgling country called Canada: fired up with enthusiasm, determination and the certainty of their principles. He hoped these feelings would last.

Chamber needs support to fight deadly apathy

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

by: SHAWN HAGERMAN

TAKE TWO WEEKS for holidays, come back, and the world has changed. Communism is illegal in Russia, but still legal in Canada. Turn the next page and locally our Chamber Board voted to cease daily operations on September 30. Things seem to be happening too quickly. It is necessary to step back and keep some perspective on our situation.

In 1985 the County agreed to a three-year Tourism and Community Service Agreement in which our Chamber would perform 10 basic services. The money that we received was a fee for services rendered. In 1988 the agreement was renewed on a year-to-year basis. It was never a grant of money. The Chamber was hired to do a job.

The Chamber in order to effectively market this County needed then and now a commitment beyond "Here's some money for this year, I don't know about next year." Marketing an area such as ours takes time, planning (usually a year or two ahead) plus the hard costs of infrastructure (in watts lines, office equipment etc.) and most importantly, finding staff with marketing experience and know how.

Not once was there in these six years any indication from the County that they were dissatisfied with the marketing or promotion of our Chamber, neither from the full County, their executive, or the representative who sits on our board. There was no phone call, no visit, no letter, nor memo that expressed any opinion on what we are doing or should be doing differently.

Once a year in March we always meet with County Council, review our activities for the past year, outline projects for the next year and present our budget requests. This year our board and marketing committee, after much thought, discussion and reflection asked only for an inflationary increase. In light of the recession it was a stand pat budget.

After my presentation there was not a single voice or question raised, there were no comments from anybody. With me was our president, our manager, and past president and co-treasurer Rhonda Elstone willing and able to discuss any concerns County may have had.

The County's surprise cut in funding left us with a short term cash flow problem. We must honour these financial commitments we have made over the past six years to market our county. However, the unexpected suddenness of county's decision has not given us enough time to find alternate means of raising money or enough time to gradually divest ourselves of those commitments to leases etc. that we have made. As an organization we cannot borrow, nor can we expect a volunteer board to shoulder the economic risk of carrying on in the hopes of additional fundings that may or may not appear. By suspending operations now, our Chamber financially remains in tact, its debts can be paid and it can be quickly kick started by the new Board when they feel it is economically feasible.

The only real danger the Chamber faces is apathy. It needs the support of its members now. It needs an annual meeting that is fully attended with a slate of directors who are prepared to be elected and set a new direction for our Chamber. This past week I have had two people come to me on separate occasions, and volunteered to work at least one day a week to keep the Chamber office open. Three more people and we are back in business. That is the spirit that will keep this Chamber and this County going.

There will be a Chamber, it may be different but it will regroup and continue to serve this community. WHY? Simply because the need is there.

Two friends re-unite in show

AT THE GALLERY

by: HOLLY G. HUTCHISON

AN EXHIBITION OF works by Ethel Curry and Doris McCarthy brings together two wonderful views of Canada, views primarily of the together two wonderful views of Canada, views primarily of the Shield within Haliburton County, which were shared and painted by these two young "artistic pioneers" in the 1930s and 1940s. It is probably the only exhibition that may be held of the works created by these two women while in their youth: when their friendship was beginning and when their cooperative exploration of visual expression was instilled within their relationship.

While studying with prominent Canadian artists through the Ontario College of Art and the Toronto School of Art (1930s), both women developed a close and lasting friendship, spending many winter and summer holidays together painting the landscape of the Haliburton Highlands. Today, Miss Curry's family is still established within the village and extended community of Haliburton. This exhibition will offer the public a chance to view paintings by these two women which have for many years been within private collections and rarely exhibited. Approximately 15 paintings by each artist will be on display.

An Artists Reception will take place at the Rails' End Gallery on Saturday, September 21st, noon to 3 p.m. Doris McCarthy will offer to sign copies of her memoirs: A Fool In Paradise and The Good Wine. Books will be available for purchase. However if you have previously purchased her memoirs, you are welcomed to bring them to the reception for Miss McCarthy to sign.

THERE'S A LOT OF HORSE staring out from behind the steel grill of the stable door. Enough to command instant respect — and a concern of where to place one's feet — when the stable door opens and 1,400 pounds of muscle and raw horsepower comes trotting out. Confronted with a beast quite literally head and shoulders above most men, you have to stand back and say it again: that's a lot of horse.

Outside, a four-month-old version is tossing its mane in the wind as its long, gangling legs carry it across the field, the forest with its smoldering fire of colour providing a picturesque backdrop. In a few months the horse's youthfulness will mellow into the more stately and awesome bearing of an adult Belgian, but today it is showing its age. Jasmine whinnies for her mother, from whom she's being weaned. Hearing her reply yet unable to see her, Jasmine tries to find a substitute in Jamie, a massive six-year-old who obviously doesn't know what to make of this frisky newcomer. Only another Belgian could be so presumptuous.

Jamie will have nothing of it and nips the rude youngster on the hip. There's a flash of legs, manes and nervous eyes as the horses — joined by Blue Bonnet in the middle of the size department — prance dangerously about the relatively small three-sided stable next to the field.

"Maybe this wasn't such a good idea," Sinc Nesbitt says to his grandson Wyatt, who cautiously but without fear is placing his much slighter body between the upset horses. A few minutes later, Wyatt has a halter over Jasmine's head and is leading her back to her stall. Peace presides in the barnyard once more.

There are few other people who know as much about Belgians as Sinclair George Nesbitt.

"There's something about me and my set up of personality that I can take one of the horses out and teach them how to stand properly and sharp," says the man with eyes as misty blue as early morning on the nearby Gull River. But there's not even a hint of vanity in his voice, and indeed, what could be a boast from others is nothing but the simple truth when spoken by Mr. Nesbitt.

"Anything that sounds braggish," he tells his interviewer, "just forget it."

An 1983 article in the Draft Horse Journal is the breeder's equivalent of the Bible's book of Numbers: Conqueror's Silver Lady begat Nesbitt's Centennial Lady, who begat Nesbitt's Miss Haliburton, who begat Nesbitt's Misty River Jan. . . And all those Misty Rivers begat dozens more Belgians, some of whom peer out from the stalls at Nesbitt's Deep Bay Road home today. Trying to keep all the blood lines straight is like trying to figure out who's related to whom in West Guilford.

But the article is not just a genealogy; beside each of the horse's names is usually the description "Grand Champion Mare" or "Reserve Grand Champion" or "Senior and Grand Champion Stallion." One of the horses, Tim, won 40 of the 41 times he was hitched. "Oh, he was proud," says Mr. Nesbitt.

At two of Canada's most prestigious work horse shows, the Canadian National Exhibition and the

by MARTHA PERKINS

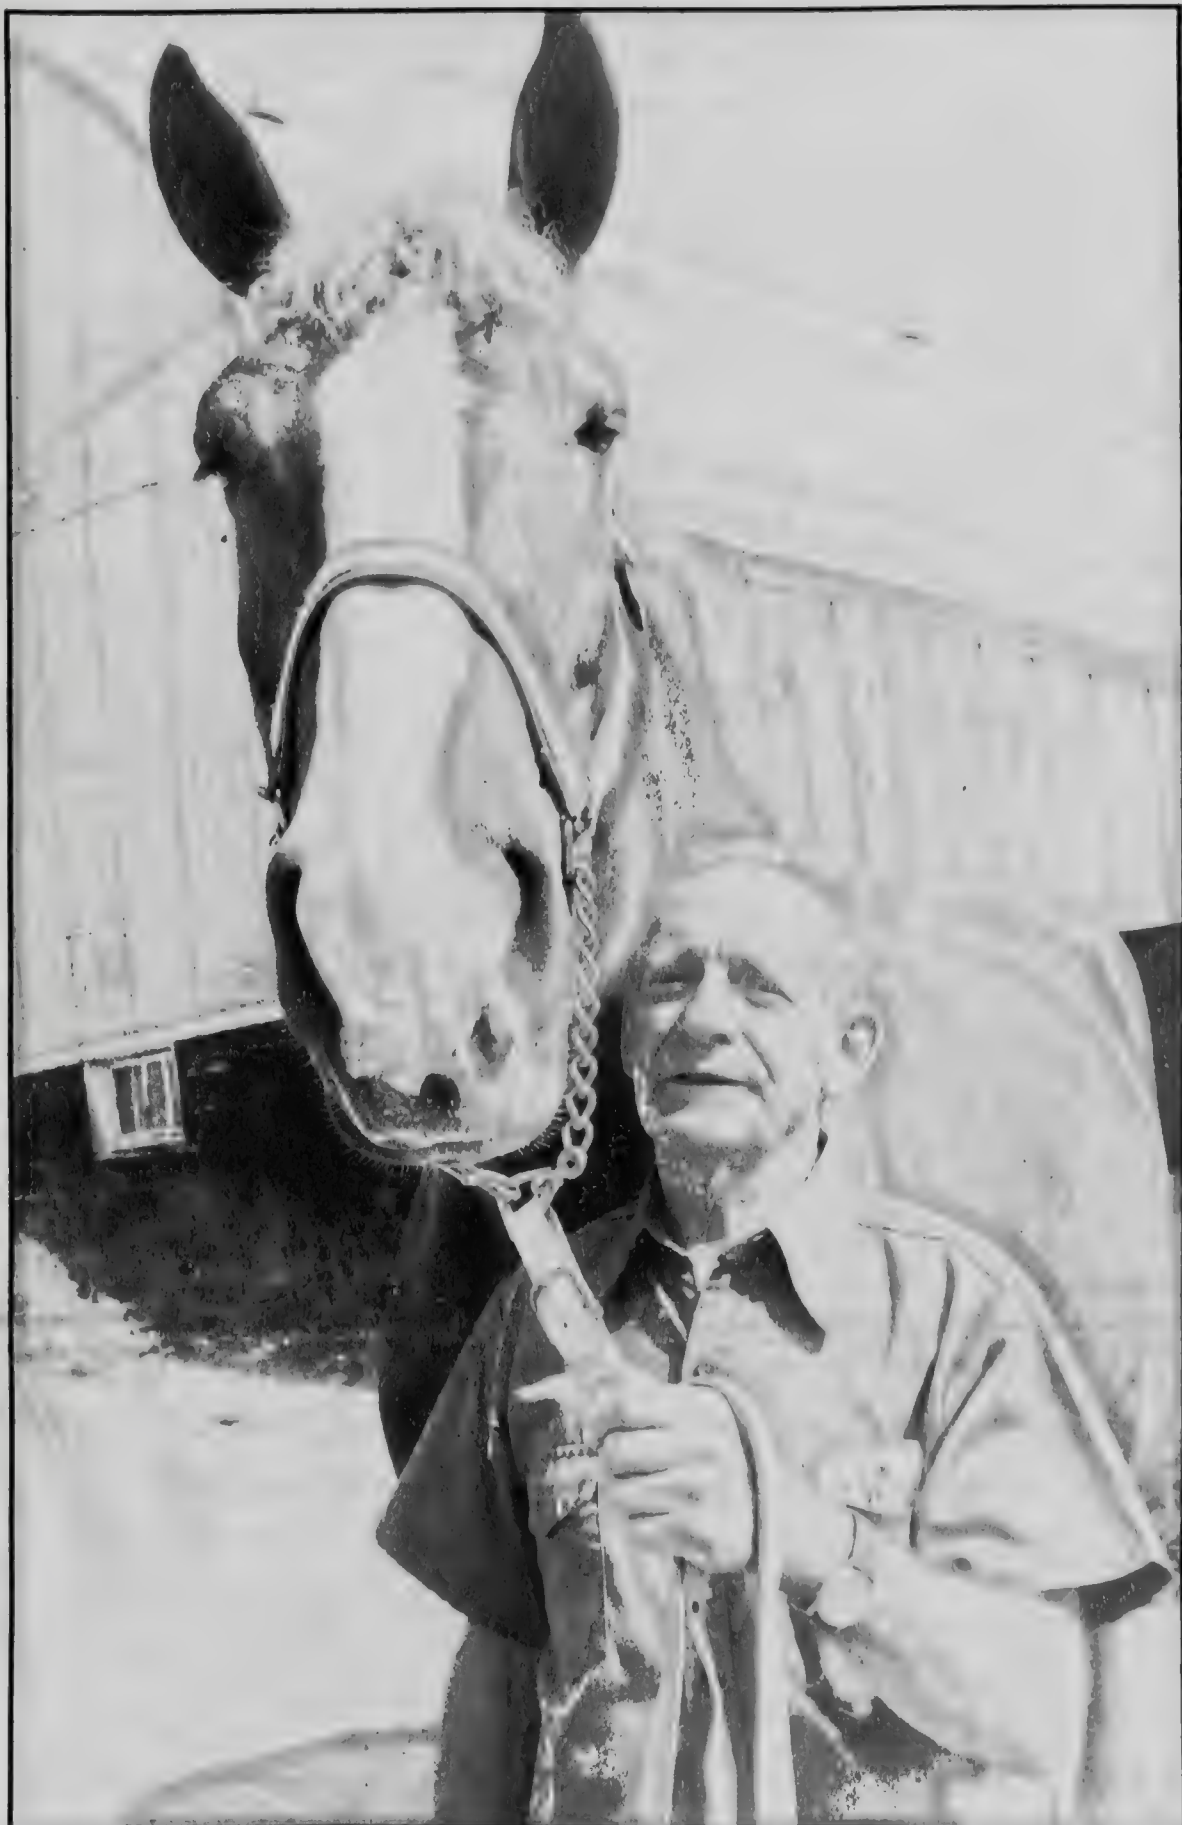

Royal Winter Fair, his horses have been winning the top honours since he bought Conqueror's Silver Lady in 1961.

At this year's CNE alone, the Nesbitts and their horses came home with the following distinctions: Connie was Senior Champion and Grand Champion Mare; Charles was Second and Reserve Senior Champion Stallion. Nesbitts placed second in the stallion and three mares category, third in Get of Six, fourth for one-year-old filly, fourth for filly foal and first in the Pair of Registered Mares Hitched.

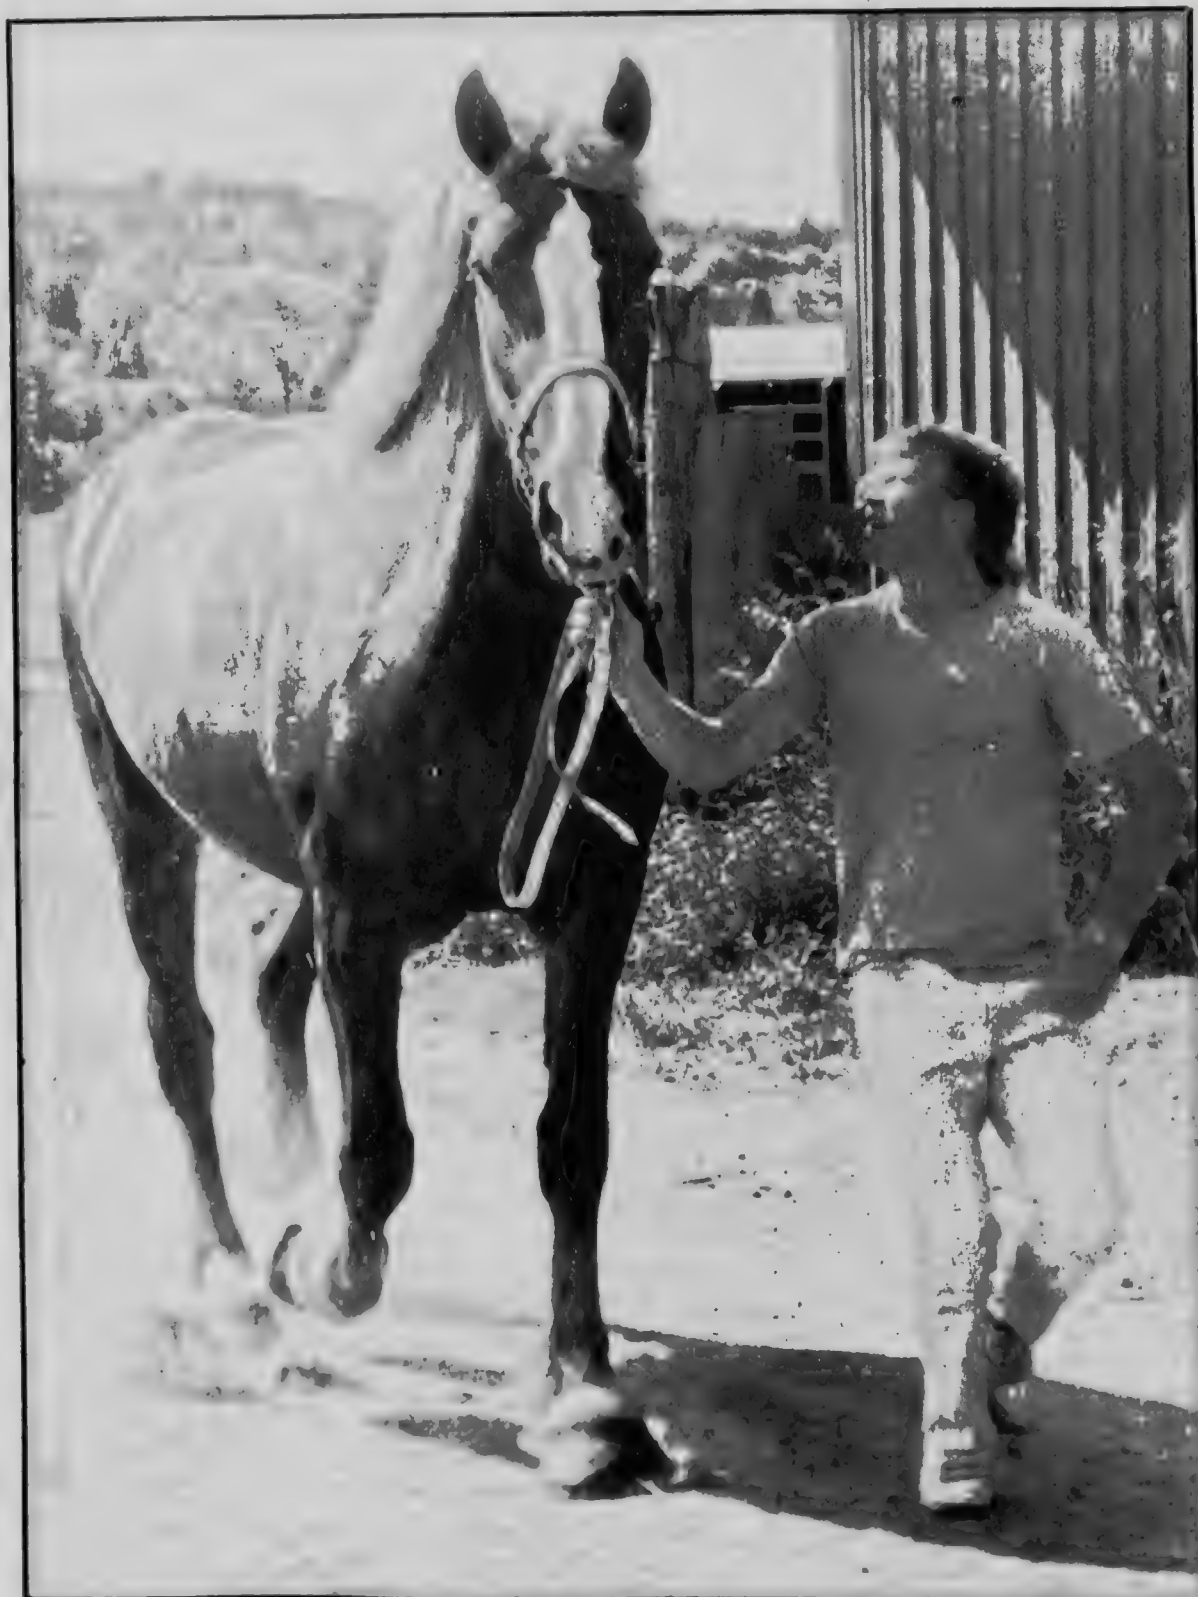

Sinc and Loretta Nesbitt's grandson Scott won the Heavy Horse Pull and Scott's brother, Wyatt, came in third in the Light Horse Pull. The boys' father, LeRoy, just broke the record in the Heavy Horse Pull at the Kinmount Fair when his team dragged 14,050 pounds of cement for the cheering crowd.

There's pride in the eyes of Sinc Nesbitt and pride in the gait of his family's famous line of Belgian champions. At right, the founder of Misty River Farms is overshadowed by Connie, who is taken through the paces by Wyatt Nesbitt, below. Misty River Farm's progeny is a surprisingly graceful mix of raw horsepower and equine gentility.

"It's called style," says Sinc Nesbitt

Among Belgian horse aficionados, Nesbitt's Haliburton Highlands Misty River Farm's offspring have developed a reputation for the best breeding and showing stock in Canada. Not just a pretty face, the horses have incredible strength and durability, just as much at home drawing logs from the forest as under the bright lights of the stadium ring.

It's not quite what Sinc Nesbitt had in mind when he travelled to Pennsylvania to look at some horses in 1961. When he saw Silver Lady — "oh, she was something" — he asked the two-year-old's owner how much he'd sell her for. Why would Mr. Nesbitt want her, the owner laughed. "You need your glasses cleaned," Mr. Nesbitt said before he did one of the brashest things in his life: he paid $1,000 of hard-earned and hard-to-find cash for Silver Lady.

"Sheldon Walker was with me and he was almost in a state of shock. We had nothing except for hard work and a lumber camp."

Mr. Nesbitt had been showing horses since the 1957 Haliburton Rotary Parade, but never seriously until Silver Lady came along. By 1964, she was earning the title Best Belgian Mare at the CNE and being bedecked by ribbons at the Royal.

"My dad was a real horseman," Mr. Nesbitt says of what started it all. George Nesbitt quickly discovered "there's no such thing as making a living off a farm in Haliburton County" and had to find other ways to provide for his family. George and Kathleen were living on a farm in Blairhampton when their son was born in 1923. Named after Carnarvon's Sinclair Russell, he's never been called anything but Sinc — or Zinc in the States.

To round off his income, George Nesbitt and his son would work in the bush camps, skidding logs with a team of horses. The elder Nesbitt always kept a critical eye out for how others would use their horses. "I hope to hell he doesn't buy those horses because he'll drive them to death," George Nesbitt was often heard saying. He taught his son that "You have to understand a horse and how much work he can stand."

"Needless to say I always overworked my horses," laughs an older and wiser Sinc Nesbitt. "I was a go-getter, always in a hurry."

Yet the young son did listen and learn. "Even when you look back," he says, "some people would subcontract for you and for one out of every six teams was a person who just couldn't understand horses."

"I tell our boys that the horses have to like you. You talk to them and clean them; they're your friends. But like children they must do as their told."

"When you're showing them they have to understand they've got to do what you want them to," says Wyatt, who at 18 virtually grew up with the prize-winning Connie.

Telling a 1,400 pound horse what to do — and getting him or her to listen — is no mean feat. Yet after only a few minutes in the barn, it's clear that Connie returns Sinc and Wyatt Nesbitt's respect. A softly spoken command and the horse's eyes and ears go up; the legs lift in determined and proud steps as if a thousand people are watching, instead of the two bystanders in the driveway. It's a sight Mr. Nesbitt never tires of.

"Oh man, it's a deep pride. I never even go to bed before show day. It's all quiet and you fix them up for the next day. You take the team we have now in the field and they sally along. Man, when you clean them up they're just a different horse. That spark comes from you — you have to have that adrenalin that fires them up a bit."

"I'm always able to generate the horses and get that out of them," he says of the horse's magnificent gait and bearing. "My son LeRoy is better at finding and understanding pulling horses."

"We'll be at a fair and I'll see a horse I really

'Man, when you clean them up they're just a different horse,' Mr. Nesbitt says as Jamie takes a peek. 'That spark comes from you, you have to have the adrenalin that fires them up' like but Dad will take one look at it and say 'You just watch him — he won't pull the hat off your head.' And he'll be right," Wyatt says.

To some, Clydesdales are far more attractive. With their long leg hairs and flowing blonde manes, that may be so, but all that hair just mats and freezes when you take the horse out to work in the bush in the winter.

After working Silver Lady for a few years, Mr. Nesbitt decided to breed her with Marquette du Marais in 1967. Nesbitt's Centennial Lady was "out of" — as in out of the womb of — Silver Lady a few months later.

"You have to figure out whether the stallion will work with your breed or not," Mr. Nesbitt says of the quest to get a strong but slim neck, good height and powerful muscles. "You have to take the papers and figure out which one will work."

Spreading the Nesbitt name and fame is Misty River Ben, the 1988 champion whose sons and daughters are starting to be all-American winners. One of the Nesbitts' mares sold for the second highest price for a Belgian in North America.

Nesbitts always have a stallion at the Minden farm. "We'll do 20 to 25 mares a year. I have done 40 but that's too much work. Ben bred 90 mares — before artificial insemination was used with others. That old mare Silver Lady is his great-grandmother."

Such success has its price. The Nesbitts are up every morning at seven, and Wyatt often doesn't finish training then washing his pulling team until 10:30 at night. There are 15 show horses and four pulling horses which need to be fed, trained and pampered. (The horses which provide such a scenic attraction by grazing in the arch of the barn on Highway 35 in Minden are Nesbitts'.) Even the four which are known more for their brawn than beauty. "The better you make the horse feel, the better they pull."

Nearly every weekend of the summer and fall the Nesbitts will be out on the road. The Kinmount Fair and the Lindsay Fair just wouldn't be the same without the Nesbitts' yellow wagon being pulled by the neatly groomed team of Belgians. "I have great friends in Lindsay but I doubt there's any fair in Ontario that has more people in two days than Kinmount."

However, Mr. Nesbitt is slowing down, especially after having a heart attack and knee surgery last winter.

Although looking forward to going to "the granddaddy of them all" in Detroit this October, Mr. Nesbitt doesn't think they'll compete at the Royal. "It's too expensive and it's awfully gawd royal hard to do." Some stalls start at $160 each and Wyatt and Scott are more interested in pulling horses than showing them.

But nothing can keep Mr. Nesbitt out of the barn. In hard times, horses became his crutch; now they are his pride and glory. Just as the Nesbitt name is carried through the generations of horses, the horses have got into Mr. Nesbitt's blood, pulsing through with a desire to produce the best looking and showing horses in North America.

Sinc Nesbitt looks at Connie being put through the paces by Wyatt. "It's called style."

This is the horse that started it all. Conqueror's Silver Lady was purchased in 1961 for $1000, an extravagance in those days. "We had nothing except for hard work and a lumber camp"

For the love of lilies. . .

by ED WHITE

Staff Reporter

SOME MEN LOVE driving fast cars. Others feel their souls moved by making music. Fine food and wine are the source of the greatest joy to legions across the globe.

But Norm Smith's passion is for something more delicate, something that takes years of nurturing to enjoy and is truly appreciated by few. Norm Smith loves lilies.

"Those are some of my superbums," says Mr. Smith, proudly pointing to a photograph of some of the flowers he has been able to grow in his garden on the shore of Lake Kashagawigamog. "Look at their bloom. I'm fortunate that that's one that likes my place. I have a spring here and the ground's always wet, and that's what they like."

The most brilliant blooming season of the lilies is past for this year, and their beds look unremarkable, but as 87-year-old Mr. Smith walks around his garden, his range of gardening prowess reveals itself. Beautiful purple flowers stand amidst others that are fading as the summer wanes. Tall trees, many planted by Mr. Smith over half a century before, fringe the yard and garden around his and his wife Catherine's cottage.

A crab-apple tree stands in the middle, its branches heavy with clusters of ripening fruit. He reaches up and caresses a few. Pointing to the trunk of the tree, which is perforated with small holes up to the branches, he says "that's the work of the sap-suckers. They fly in and drill holes and drink from the bark. People write to gardening experts and ask 'Are they bad?' Well, they're not bad, they eat the bugs. Look at these," he says of a handful of the deeply red fruit, "they're perfect." The smooth, shiny, unblemished fruit sit in his hand, like medals from a long campaign.

Mr. Smith spends part of his time at his cottage on Kashagawigamog, and the rest at his home in Millbrook. At both places he has gardens, gardens which are planned meticulously. "Every year I map out what I've planted and what manages to grow. We're fortunate here," he says of the Highlands. "The soil's acidic, which suits some types of lily. Many come from Northern Europe or Siberia, and this land is perfect for them, but people all over the U.S. try to grow them and don't get anything."

His gardens are like little world's fairs — there are representatives of the far-flung parts of the world standing side by side, bedecked in all the finery and grandeur which the caprice of nature has bestowed upon them. Mr. Smith has grown lilies native to Russia, South Africa, Australia, and elsewhere.

As an avid lily grower he is, of course, a member of lily societies, and this has brought him into the network of lily-swapping that brings seeds from across the oceans into his gardens. Each year Mr. Smith packages some of his most interesting types of lilies and sends them off to other countries.

This is not an anonymous system. Mr. Smith has grown to know his distant lily-growing companions through yearly contact, his relationship with one South African going back 25 years. Another in Australia was visited by his daughter and her husband a few years back.

"They've invited me to come and stay," says Mr. Smith, who through them became a member of their societies, just as he enrolled them in his.

"Once you get involved you get seeds from all over the world, and you find out it's a tremendous field you're exploring. It's a real challenge — you have to keep a lot of things on the go. There are 1001 things you have to hold in your head."

His devotion has produced brilliant and beautiful flowers, and also provoked the wonder of many at the work he has to do to keep his garden productive. "We brought up some friends in the spring and they said 'Norm kisses the roots of every tree,'" he laughs. "Well, you have to keep it up or you lose it."

Mr. Smith's first foray into the world of lily-growing was the planting of a tiger-lily in 1934. He says he loved to see how plants grew, and the garden by Kashagawigamog was the perfect place to try his hand at what he'd only observed before. "It was the first place I had any land, and I could do what I liked. I started off with the odd fruit tree and flowers, and it's just grown."

The garden Norm Smith cleared trees for, planned and planted with trees and flowers has matured, as has the area surrounding the cottage, an area which is radically different from that which he began with.

Mr. Smith was a keen canoeist, and had paddled all through the Muskoka lakes and all the waterways between Orillia and Georgian Bay. A trip through the Highland lakes revealed their attractions to him, and he decided to look for a spot to call his own.

He and Catherine began coming to the lake in 1926, staying as boarders at a farm house. Since they weren't married they slept in different rooms, and once, when a group of lost tourists showed up, he found himself sharing a room with three other men.

As soon as he could he settled on some land, and began his long residence on Kashagawigamog.

"I bought this place when I was a kid and people thought I was crazy," he says with a grin. One can see why he finds this amusing if one looks down across the property which gently sweeps to the shore of Kashagawigamog, a great, gentle front that holds a wide expanse of the lake as its view. "We've been here since 1927. I think I was the first one after Mr. Salter, and I'm probably the oldest cottager on the lake."

But the couple did not enjoy the Friday afternoon to Sunday evening weekend many cottagers now see as barely enough. "In those days, before

PEOPLE

England, merry England?

by H. MICHAEL COLLINS

I DECIDED TO VISIT this famous nursery that, over the years, has produced most of the present population of English-speaking Canada. However, my purpose was more personal than curious. I had a very dear friend who, for reasons that still seem obscure, had decided to forsake the clean air and space of home for the sardine-can existence of modern living in England.

First there are a number of facts that must be appreciated before the true flavour (or lack of) of both the English themselves and their daily habits can be evaluated in an unbiased manner. Before I left, a dear old, female ex-patriate, who probably left the country at the turn of the century, asked me where I was going to stop-over. I replied that the Carshalton in Surrey would be my headquarters.

"Oh," she said somewhat rapturously, "that is a dear little town, truly picturesque and surrounded by rolling hills." Actually it is not a town at all in our terms. It is an extension of London. It has no visible limits or particular definition. If you cross over two streets you will find yourself in an equally unstructured area with a new name. The so-called towns are identified by certain landmarks that have been spared the wrecker's hammer.

The streets are narrow, twisted and seldom proceed in any discernable direction. Apparently they were once cow paths that got paved over. They just qualify for one-way street status but in defiance of every law of nature, they are used as main thoroughfares for double lane traffic all hurtling along at breakneck speeds with only a layer of paint between passing vehicles. Whatever else these cars must have, brakes are the most important. Wheeling around a sharp corner at 50 or 50 miles an hour, one is apt to meet a huge London bus occupying the whole road. You pull in to the curb, brakes screeching, while the autobus usually mounts the pavement and sneaks past. Pedestrians have no rights at all. Indeed, I came to an early conclusion that the secret goal of most drivers was to pulverize one of these innocents in order to increase his standing amongst the motoring fraternity.

To give them their due, most of these vaguely constituted communities have large and beautiful parks. They are loaded with flowers of all colours and species but roses predominate. Ancient trees are carefully guarded against natural disasters. Artificial ponds, streams and waterfalls are a must. Areas are set off for lawn bowling and cricket. Proper uniform is 'de rigueur' for these outings.

Housing is a huge problem. Lack of land and resultant high cost interact to make even semi-detached structure economically unrealistic. The usual domicile has a frontage of 25' to 35' with a depth of about 100' and generally one unit in a long mews. The back gardens are totally fenced in. However, each householder fills these tiny spaces with little miniature ponds, flowers, shrubs, hedges, trellises and, often, the odd fruit tree. All the gardens in a single mews are of identical size and are regarded as sanctuaries from the grimness of daily living. You may nod to your neighbour as you meet him each morning but a s a rule, further intimacy is frowned upon. Indeed, the average 'Brit' speaks only to those known to him or her and avoids contacts with strangers in the same manner as they would avoid getting AIDS.

I spent one day in London. It was a real eye-opener. As reported in the Daily Telegraph, the average speed of traffic in 1988 is one mile per hour slower than in 1888: namely seven. After leaving Victoria Station, I had to wait to get across the street. Pedestrians never cross the road unless protected by a special pedestrian traffic light. As I stood there alongside a visiting American, I remarked to him, "If that light doesn't change soon, we will both soon be lying here on the pavement, unconscious from breathing this almost pure carbon monoxide atmosphere." The air pollution in London resembles the gas attacks in World War One. I did the usual thing, visiting the Royal Palace, Hyde Park and the Olympic staging area, my camera at the ready. I left London with the same sigh of relief that a deep sea diver must feel when, almost out of oxygen, he rises to the surface for air.

One of the first requisite for visiting England is a very full pocketbook. The cost of living in this benighted land is unbelievable. Food is so dear that even the prosaic grapefruit retails for up to $1.60 each. It is understandable why "bangers and mash" and fish and chips are standard bills of fare. Tripe, heart, liver etc. represent the cheapest and most common protein portions of the average Englishman's fare. Fresh meat is reserved for Sunday dinner. But I noticed that everything from cars to yogurt were at least twice the price of such items at home. So much for the misconception that this tight little isle is filled with well-fed, happy, busy people. In fact, they are only slowly catching up to Europe in plant updating. Their confrontational labour/management policies prevents any real advances in either technology or methodology. When they join the Common Market, for a while at least the economy is going to suffer a devastating recession. While I was there, the unemployment figures were in excess of three million. They have no minimum wage nor usury laws. However, they do have a fairly comprehensive social welfare network, that, at the moment, is being stretched to breaking. The final threat to the future of their economy, lies in the abysmal efficiency record of the average worker.

But that's being too serious. After all, I was unfortunately, exposed to the Greater London Area for most of my stay. I have been assured by divers expatriates that northern counties and the hill areas are both beautiful, more friendly and markedly cheaper. This last item I am forced to believe since it would be impossible to imagine any place in England more expensive than Metropolitan London. Therefore, I will take it as a 'given' that the rest of England is a joy to behold. Ancient castles, picturesque pubs and overly friendly natives, I have been assured, fill the hills and dales of rural Britain. Indeed, on the trip down to Burgess Hill, I did see some impressive farmlands. However, in spite of these open areas with their promise of adequate building space, the houses in the small rural villages were, like their counterparts in Carshalton, crowded together like lost sheep. The logic behind this unnecessary economy of space still escapes me.

One of my more humorous experiences relates to the contest between the railway bureaucracy and myself et al. At the urging of my good friend Caryl, I decided to visit the famous watering resort of Brighton-by-the-sea. Promptly at 9:30 in the morning I boarded, successfully it turned out, the train to Clapham Junction where I was assured I could catch an express to Brighton. When I detrained, there was a sign saying that the next conveyance would be the correct choice for my destination. After checking this with the station-master, I and several other gullible visitors boarded the train. After the door closed we could all hear some muffled instructions being shouted over the loudspeakers. None of us paid the slightest attention to these garbled statements spoken in an incomprehensible Cockney dialect.

It's easy to get lost in maze of advice

An hour later, after stopping for everything but hitch-hiking turtles, we arrived at the huge metropolis of East Grinstead where a loud and profane conductor bawled us out for not listening to the last second re-routing of the Brighton Express. Three quarters of an hour later we returned to East Croydon Junction. Again there was a train waiting in the station. Again, I was informed that it was the Brighton Express. Again, without realizing the extent to which the employees of this transportation establishment would carry out a practical joke on naive visitors, I and my companions boarded afresh this guaranteed fast service. An hour and a half later, after stopping for even wandering gypsies, we arrived at our destination. The time was then 1:30 in the afternoon.

Brighton is a large noisy edition of Coney Island. Most of its historic buildings are now hidden behind tall high-rises. Even con-artists in England congregates there each summer. They flog the cheapest and ugliest clothing, T-shirts, crockery and jewellery at prices that can only be described as usurious. Gambling resorts line the main drag and the piers. The strand is actually a rough stone-filled shingle that is almost impossible to walk on. The sea itself is malodorous and noticeably polluted.

I walked out to the end of the main pier. Besides fish-and-chip stands, fortune tellers, slot machine parlours, the odd bedraggled hooker, it's long, protected benches were filled with elderly sun-bathers, who gazed with fish-like eyes at the passing throngs. They gave the impression of rows of freshly caught cod slowly expiring in the unfamiliar heat and sunshine. I must have walked at least three miles along the single, through the town and to the end of the pier, when I was struck with a sudden premonition. What if the friends who ran the railways were not yet through with me? I decided not to tempt fate. I returned to the station. There I encountered a young, intelligent-looking train person, who smiled in a kindly manner when I approached him.

"Could you tell me when the next express to Clapham Junction will arrive?" I said firmly in my best sure-to-please, voice.

"Where are you going?" he enquired, showing a reasonable amount of friendly interest.

I smiled ingratiatingly. "To Carshalton". My new friend beamed at me. "I will get you home at least half an hour sooner if you follow my instructions to the letter. Board this train on track five. It stops at East Croydon Junction. Get off there, cross to West Croydon Station — that is a mere step away — and take the first Sutton train. Voila, you will be home in a few minutes." I thanked him warmly and proceeded to carry out his advice carefully. Finally I had found a friend not wedded to the idea of embarrassing tourists. At East Croydon, I enquired as to the fastest way to the other station. I was assured again that it was practically on the doorstep. Some 20 perspiring minutes later I found the goddam place. It was at least a mile away following as mixed-up a path as any in England. However, surely, now my travails were over. I was directed to the right platform and again told I could take any Sutton train. There was one on the tracks when I arrived. Without hesitation I climbed aboard and sat down by a typical English banker type. How, I hear you say, did you know he was an office-worker? That's easy. All such people dress in very conservative, dark suits, carry a brolley no matter how clear and hot the day, generally wear a bowler, and clutch their briefcase to their chests. They read either the Times or the Telegraph.

After showing some irritation at being suddenly addressed by a complete stranger, he announced gruffly, "This train does not stop at Carshalton". I was afraid to annoy him further, so I decided to get off at Sutton and reroute myself.

This time I was successful. There was a train to Carshalton. It would arrive in 10 minutes. However at the appointed hour, it was announced regretfully that the train was seven minutes late. When that period of time ran out, a new statement was made lengthening the delay to 10 minutes then later to 12 minutes. Finally however, the beast arrived. I walked in the door of my new home at a quarter to six. I had spent two hours in Brighton and seven hours fighting the conspiracy that calls itself the bet transportation system in the world. I am living proof that such a statement is, to put it mildly, greatly exaggerated.

Another habit that has developed in this home of Democracy is that of security. If you leave your car for more than 30 seconds, you must roll up the windows and lock all the doors. You would no more leave your house with a shutter opened than you would leave your purse unattended. Whether this queer syndrome is purely an exercise in unusual caution or is based on actual experience is hard to judge. It may be of a class related to their mad driving peculiarities. I was never able to come to any firm conclusion in either event. Under most conditions they seem unduly conservative but when they get behind the wheel of any vehicle they lose all sense of normal prudence. Whether they are driving a mile or a hundred, they break all speed laws and exhibit a complete lack of judgement. The average pedestrian has a permanent, frightened scowl on his face. He seems to expect the worst of life but ploughs ahead into the maelstrom with out-thrust jaw. Smiles are rare and conversation with their fellow-man almost non-existent.

The few people that I did meet on friendly turf usually asked me where I came from. When I described the somewhat idyllic nature of Central Ontario, to a man (or woman) they said in awe, "What in hell are you going here?"

I know that England was the cradle of Modern Democratic Society. It's laws are our laws. Its expatriates developed what was then the colony of Canada, yet I can say, without hesitation, that it's a nice place to visit but no-one in their right mind would stay any longer than possible. London is full of interesting historical sites but remember, don't stand on the street for more than a few minutes or you will drop dead from the overwhelming air pollution. Out of curiosity, while walking down the main drag one morning, I tried to make eye contact with the passing throng. As each pedestrian met my friendly stare, they looked almost frightened just before dropping their gaze to the pavement. However, one somewhat elderly gentleman, whom I walked up to and began commenting about the weather, finally gave in. Then I couldn't shut him up. He held me spellbound in his gaze while he told me most of his life's history. Another time, while reading my paper on a park bench, a well-endowed lady sat down beside me. In minutes she engaged me in a somewhat intimate conversation that ended with her reading a selection or recently written poems. I praised her temerity. Advised her that I admired Womens 'Lib' and left her looking more startled than understanding. She must have been one of those exceptions that Caryl told me surely existed.

So I will say good-bye to Merry England. Long may it stand but without me, without me, dear friends.

the war, people still worked Saturday mornings. We'd get on the train Saturday afternoon and get here at six o'clock." They would leave less than 24 hours later, on the 5:30 to Toronto. (If they were late, the train engineer would wait for these regular patrons.)

Train travel was the best for these short visits, since they were able to bring their canoe along for two dollars, and car travel was out of the question. There were no roads to the lake.

"I bought the land without having any roads come to it, and we would have to walk over two hills from Goulds (where there was a train stop) to our place, carrying groceries and everything else with us."

He and Mrs. Smith paddled all over the lakes, and watched as they slowly developed into resort areas. But the rural elements were always close. "The Fearreys' cows would come down into our yard, knock open our vegetable box and eat all the onions. They used to complain the cows had onion milk for a week after visiting our place," Mr. Smith jokes. "Sometimes I'd wake in the middle of the night and hear them out there. I'd open the window and they'd practically lick your face."

Roads now reach the Smith's cottage, and finding a cow anywhere within five miles would be difficult, but one thing which is still the same is Mr. Smith's lilies.

He has grown dozens of types of lilies over the years, and has their beauty captured in photographs, both black and white, from years ago, and colour. The flowers seem to explode ecstatically outward in the photographs, their sensual petals furled and curling back away from the deep centre, where tongues leap directly out.

The flowers themselves are stunning in their natural beauty, but Mr. Smith has made them even more enticing by his careful composition and handling of the photographs.

Mr. Smith, apart from being an accomplished lily-grower, is also a talented photographer. Each year his lilies may die, but their spirit, or at least their appearance, lives on the photographs which have been shown in exhibitions across the world.

Two of the photographs were shown at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933, others were seen in Japan in 1934, and innumerable shots have appeared in lily exhibitions in Europe and North America.

While working for Bell Canada he had photo pages given him in the company's monthly magazine, and now he has given most of his pictures, negatives and exhibition catalogues to the National Archives, which collects amateur photography.

"I'd rather give it all to them than see the collection broken up," Mr. Smith says. "Being an amateur I was able to experiment more than a professional could, and I had some interesting results."

He began taking photographs in 1917, learning the craft from his brother. He worked alone for years, doubtful of his own abilities. "I thought the Toronto Camera Club was a hallowed spot. I didn't know if they would laugh at me if I tried to join." They did not laugh at him, and his increasing skill helped him become president of the organization for two years in the 1930s.

But his photography is clearly secondary to his interest in his gardens. He seldom picks up a camera now, but his gardening he continues with passion, trying every year to improve what he has, and never shying away from trying something new.

"Sometimes things don't work, but that's all part of it," Mr. Smith says. "That lily is native to the Caucasus," he says, pointing to a photograph. "It takes four years to flower after being planted, and you have to have patience."

"I don't want any publicity," he says. "I'm just a man with hobbies. I think everyone should have hobbies. I didn't get anything by talent, it's just I'm a persistent son-of-a-gun."

Many of Norm Smith's picture-perfect photos of his lilies are now in the National Archives.

Growing the beautiful superbum

Bob Heyes, who by day is a doctor in Haliburton, is an avid gardener in his spare time. This is an article he wrote for the Ontario Regional Lily Society spring newsletter.

by BOB HEYES

ABOUT 8 YEARS AGO, Norm Smith gave me my first superbum. The next year he brought another. The bulbs, unlike the concentric type of the Asiatics, were pure white and connected by fleshy stolons. As it turned out, the first sample had green stems when mature, but the second clump was black-stemmed. The black stemmed also differ in their blooming time — a week later. They grow within 20 feet of each other, under identical conditions, so I can only assume they represent different clones.

Although Haliburton sits atop the Canadian Shield with only a few inches of sandy acidic soil, I am blessed with a garden that lies in a pocket of deep clay — in spring, thick gummy stuff that sucks off your boots if you venture out to inspect too soon! Over the years, my garden has consumed truck loads of compost, manure and sand in an effort to improve the drainage and tilth. It's slowly improving, but I still grow all my lilies and other perennials in long raised rows with shallow depressed walkways between. This is maintained by hilling, exactly like a row of potatoes, twice a year. Occasionally, I top dress with a sand and peat moss mixture or compost.

The two clumps of superbum are in one of these rows. They get full sun all day and don't seem to miss the moist woodland habitat they're noted for. However, one good point about clay is that it holds moisture well, for which I've been especially grateful the past 2 or 3 dry summers. The pH when last tested was 5.6. This does very nicely for the acid loving superbum. I might add that the superbum is also very wind-fast. In my open garden, strong easterly winds topple the corn at least once every August, but the superbum never suffer. And they're often as tall or taller than the corn with the stronger stems nearing nine feet.

Blooming time is mid-July, usually just after the lily show. For the North American Lily show at the Royal Botanical Gardens in 1988, my wife and I took an immense stem with an impressive bud count, but plenty of warm water and even a steamy shower at the hotel room could not coax even one flower to completely open. Unentered, we took it home and enjoyed several days of bloom the next week.

Disease seems not to be a problem in this area. One wet summer all my lilies including the superbum, had their leaves turn prematurely brown and fall off from the bottom up. I assumed this was botrytis. It was a little unsightly, but the next year's growth and bloom seemed unaffected. Insects likewise are no problem. There is no need to spray.

Winter protection is unnecessary here as most years we get a thick blanket of snow. But even in the poor snow years there is not winter kill that I'm aware of.

The slumps have remained undisturbed since first planted. They now occupy a sizable share of the row in spite of annually digging a few bulbs from the outside edge to give away. I would estimate the larger group has 40 to 50 stems, and the centre ones never seem to weaken.

Of all the species lilies I've tried, the superbum is definitely the most forgiving and propagates prolifically without any effort on my part. A good bet for the lazy gardener — highly recommended by this lily grower.

IN MEMORIAM

ACKLEY, HOWARD — In loving memory of a dear father, grandfather and great grandfather who passed away Sept. 9, 1986. When thoughts go back as they often do.

We treasure the memory we have of you. This day of remembrance is silently kept. No words are needed, we will never forget.
Lovingly remembered by Maxine, Preston & family. 32-P-10

ROBERTS, FRANK — In loving memory of my dear husband, who passed away Sept. 15, 1990.
My Dearest Frank
One year ago today, our Lord called you home
And left me on life's pathway so alone
Though you are gone my Love, your face I cannot see
Still I hold you close with each precious memory
I see your love in our children's eyes
Hear your voice when they speak my name
In our grandsons' laughter, I know you smile again
Your kind and honest hands, kept your family free from care
Everywhere I look my Love, I see their hard work there
As the snow plough labours up the hill, at the break of day
Or a grader rounds the corner, you are on your way
When the fire siren breaks the stillness of the night
You hurry there, to join the others in the fight
Your hoe hangs on the wall, down where your garden grew
From her house you built, the swallow scans the view
I see you by the old shop door, where chippy checks his food supply
And standing with the seed can, when I hear the blue jay cry.
Your fishing pole stands idle now, your guns lie on the rack
Everytime I see them, Dear, sweet memories bring you back
As a gentle breeze blows through the pines, I sense your presence there
Relaxing in the coolness, in a wooden old lawn chair
I see you on your tractor when I smell new mown hay
And I know when the wind brings snow, I'll see you again that way
At the Honda and the SkiDoo's roar, I hear you ride again
Enjoying our Lord's gift of life, in the sunshine, snow or rain
No words I pen Dear Love, can bring you back to me
Until we meet again, I'll hold you close, with each precious memory.
Your loving wife Jessie. 32-P-10

IN MEMORIAM

MARY KOLLO — In loving memory of our dear aunt, who passed away Sept. 9, 1990.
So many things happened
Since you were called away.
Shame-how greedy's disposed
Your many wishes — the insensitive way.
Though absent you are ever near
Memories of you calls my tear
Forever loved and so sadly missed by Elizabeth, Jenny, Jeanette, Betty, Joseph Gizella. 32-P-10

Big week ahead for the Legion

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by: WINNIE SCHOFIELD

Wilberforce Branch 624 of the Royal Canadian Legion will be holding Legion Week from Sept. 15 to the 22nd. This will be a time when everyone is invited to drop in and discover what the Legion is all about, its goals, values and achievements as a club for ex-service men. Daily events are planned and the weekends with a Retreat under the direction of Charlie Harflett. This consists of an age-old custom of lowering the flag before a guard of honour while rousing music is presented by the pipe band. Information about this interesting week can be had by telephoning Legion President Joyce Gillies.

The Legion Bingo games held at the Lloyd Watson Centre through the summer weeks have been a complete success. A well-attended Monster Bingo finished the season. Monday evening Bingo games now resume at the Legion Hall.

The children are back at school and plans are in place for the Penny Auction that will be held on Friday, Sept. 20th from 4:30 to 7:30. This event sponsored by a group of parents and teachers will be bringing a variety of programs here for the enjoyment of the children. Funds raised will be used for such things as musical treats, excursions etc., none of which is provided by the school board. The group are in need of small gifts for children and are appealing for contributions. Articles for the white elephant table would also be appreciated. Contributions may be dropped off at the school office on week days between 8:30 am 3:30.

For more information call Mary Dale or Marianne Tighe.

The first meeting of the Monmouth Senior Citizens took place Sept. 10th. Members enjoyed a lunch then cards and carpet bowling. They extend a welcome to all seniors to come out and enjoy their friendly club. Word from Anne Bridgewater is that the winner of the Quilt draw was Jim Shaw of Cardiff Lake and they would like to thank all those who bought tickets. She also mentions that many people did not understand the Senior's float in the Country Good Times parade. They were not advertising local businesses. Every heart on the float had the name of a business of individuals who had donated to the Club and this was their way of thanking them publicly.

From Casey Forget: Wilberforce Play school starts Thursday, Sept. 12th. Please join us Thursday morning for some stimulating playtime for your pre schoolers as well as a friendly visit with other parents. All are welcome and it is free. We look forward to seeing you Thursday morning, 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the Lloyd Watson Centre. For information call Theresa Riley 448-2669 or Casey Forget 448-2064.

Direct depositing available

As a result of the ongoing mail strike, many recipients of Canada Pension, Old Age Security and Family Allowance have been concerned about the delivery of their monthly cheques.

The Government of Canada is now offering another option, called "Direct Deposit". This enables pensioners and Family Allowance recipients to have their funds deposited electronically.

Applications are now available at your nearest Information Centre in Haliburton or Minden and at most financial institutions. For assistance call 457-2733 — Monday to Friday or 286-4100 Monday and Tuesday.

Women taking back the night

SINCE 1978, women around the world have taken to the streets on September 15 in a Take Back the Night rally to reclaim the night and assert their right to walk at any time of the day of night, unprotected. Now, marches are held in over 43 major Canadian cities, towns and villages across the country. September 15, 1991 marks the second annual march by Haliburton County women to protest global violence against women.

Although historically the central theme of the march has been to demand the right of women to walk alone at night on the street, in recent years the whole spectrum of violence against women has been highlighted. The connections between stranger rape, acquaintance rape, wife assault, sexual harassment, incest and other issues are vividly drawn. The Take Back the Night march brings women together in their communities to demand safety and real security for themselves, their children, their sisters, mothers and grandmothers.

The march is a symbolic action. "We take back our freedom to walk in safety anytime, anywhere!" says Caroline Bishop, a member of the organizing committee. It is an action which recognizes that male violence against women is pervasive in our society and that it affects all women. The message of Take Back the Night is to fight back. This includes fighting for measures that will make women safer, lobbying for adequate funding of women's services, ensuring such services reflect women's needs and to educate the public about issues of violence.

The organizing committee recognizes that many men are concerned about incidences of violence against women. However, the Take Back the Night march is organized by and for women. It is an opportunity for women to protest violence against women and children. By participating in a march as a group, women are making a statement that they can walk at night without male protection. Men are asked instead to show their support by speaking out against male violence against women, supporting women's rights to walk safely unprotected at night and by attending the rally but not participating in the march itself.

All women and children in the county are invited to participate and to bring a candle to light for the march. The rally and march will begin at 7:00 p.m. on Sunday September 15, in the parking lot beside the Skyslider in Haliburton Village. The committee organizing the event has planned speakers, music by "Precious Friends" Dianne Hagerman and Janice Benoit, a March through downtown Haliburton and then refreshments back at the starting point at Hillside house Community Services Centre (behind the Fire Hall). The evening's events should conclude about 9:00 p.m.

WEST GUILFORD NEWS

by: ELEANOR COOPER

Congratulations to Bev and Kevin Sisson on the arrival of their third son, Gregory Owen, on August 31 in Peterborough. Welcome little fellow, to the great Sisson Clan as the newest member of the community.

Barrie and Pat Martin attended the 65th anniversary in Tweed, Ontario, of Barrie's grandparents on the long weekend in August.

Erin Nicholls, youngest son of Marge and George, is in Ungava for a month with hunters. His training in the bush as hunter and his experience as taxidermist are proving valuable with this large group who have need of someone with Erin's skills in skinning, packing, preserving meat and hides.

Thank you to the anonymous someone who left a raisin loaf on my doorstep on Wednesday last week. Extra baking the week before the wedding is surely appreciated!

Karl and Eileen Barry, together with all their sons and daughters attended the wedding in Oshawa of Greenville and Brenda Barry's son Jeff to Beth Fairweather on August 23, 1991. Cullen Gardens was the scene of the reception, and at North York the Fairweather and Barry families congregated again to celebrate the occasion in the evening. Jeff and Beth will be living in Bowmanville. The good wishes of this community go with them. Mike and Sharon Sisson also attended the wedding from West Guilford. Angela and Karen, Brenda's twin sister's girls from Victoria were pleased to be able to fly back for the special occasion.
